(3) IMPLEMENTATION.—The Director, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall take such actions as necessary to ensure that the Office of Lobbying Registration and Public Disclosure is able to provide computer telecommunication or other transmittal of registrations and reports as required under section 7(b)(11) on the effective date of this Act, or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, we have before us today a bill that is the product of hours and hours of work on the part of many Members of the House, originally on both sides. Whether or not that continues to be the case remains to be seen today.

But it arises out of the fact that today in the United States we have a set of lobbying statutes that do not work, do not require the disclosure of necessary information so that the public can know what is going on, does not tell those who do lobby what they have to do and what they do not have to do, and are for all practical purposes useless.

Instead we have brought to the House today historic legislation that would require that lobbyists register, that they disclose what they spend in the pursuit of their lobbying objectives, that they make clear exactly what they are doing, and the upshot of it is that the American people will now know what is going on and who is spending what and who is doing what in pursuit of the objectives of the many organizations, most of them good ones, that lobby this Congress in hopes of passing legislation or changing legislation or defeating legislation.

In addition to that, we have added to this bill legislation that would change the rules with regard to what a lobbyist is able to spend money on a Member of the House of Representatives.

It simply says that a lobbyist no longer will be permitted to buy lunch or dinner for a Member of Congress, will no longer be able to pay for golf outings or entertainment for a Member of Congress, or theater tickets, says they will no longer be able to buy gifts for a Member of Congress. It is unfortunate that we even need to deal with this because for 99 percent of the Members of this House this legislation will have no impact because 99 percent of the Members of this House never come in contact with any of that anyway.

This place is full of great people. My greatest surprise in coming here 11½ years ago was to find how high the quality of people here on both sides of the aisle was and is, and I am sure it will continue to be. People come here to do a good job and to serve the public interest, and they try hard at it, but for whatever reason the perception in the public today is different, and this legislation is designed to deal with that perception.

We have faced criticisms from those who do not want to do anything and criticisms from those who want to do things that will actually impede our ability to do our jobs. I submit to my colleagues that no legislation can solve everybody's objections, but this legislation has come as close as it possibly could.

What am I talking about? I am talking about the letter many of my colleagues have received from Common Cause saying that as of yesterday they decided to oppose the legislation. One year ago Common Cause came before our subcommittee and said to us, "We want you to disclose all of the expenditures that lobbyists make on Members of Congress," and what did we say?

We said, "OK. We're going to disclose all of those except the ones that we prohibit."

And so we have prohibited residual expenditures and we required a disclosure of the rest.

Now, 1 year later, for some reason they decided that they are going to move the goal and decide that they want—I guess they want disclosure instead of prohibitions, or they want prohibitions where we have disclosure. It is not possible to keep up with them.

The fact of the matter is we have prohibited the expenditures about which most people complain. We have stopped the entertainment, we have stopped the gifts that can be given today, and we have come forth with a very, very strong bill.

We have heard from the nonprofits. Most of these nonprofits represent interests that I agree with, the Sierra Club, many of the nonprofit hospitals. But the fact of the matter is they should be treated the way everybody else is treated. It is not fair for us to require that General Motors disclose its contacts with the executive branch or the Environmental Protection Agency when at the same time the Sierra Club, lobbying on the other side of the issue, does not have to disclose its contacts with the executive branch. I would probably support the Sierra Club's position, but I believe they ought to be governed by the same rules that their adversaries are governed by, and that is what the nonprofits have written our colleagues about: They do not want to be covered.

I ask my colleagues this question:

"Nonprofit hospitals; do you think that they should not have to disclose their lobbying contacts with the Department of Health and Human Services while others, who are in the private business of providing health care should have to disclose theirs?"

I do not think that is fair, and this bill does not permit that, but that is what the nonprofits that wrote us letters want us to do.

We have a strong bill. I urge the Members to support it.

Mr. MFUME. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MFUME. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], the sponsor of the legislation, for yielding to me.

Could the gentleman answer a question for me or at least attempt to? It is my understanding that the nonprofits now, through the files that they have to disclose with IRS, are engaged in much more disclosure than the for-profit organizations, and I think what nonprofits are asking for, everything from the Heritage Foundation to the NAACP, is the ability to use the definitions and the formula that they already use to disclose their activities in IRS to comply with the intent of this bill.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I say to the gentleman, Mr. MFUME, let me answer you in the quickest way possible. The answer to that question is simply this:

They do not want to have to reveal their lobbying contacts with the executive branch, and they have cloaked that desire in rhetoric relating to the IRS regulations. We have been extremely generous with them in dealing with the way in which they have to keep up with their expenses, but this is a question of whether or not they can get by with contacting the executive branch and not having to disclose it, and we're not going to let them do that. It has nothing to do with the IRS.

Mr. MFUME. I ask the gentleman, "Aren't those already disclosed in the IRS forms?"

Mr. BRYANT. The answer is "no."

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Members of the House, many moons ago, it seems like a decade ago, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] and I joined in a bipartisan effort to bring together the varying registration laws that were on the books, both for foreign commercial enterprises and governmental enterprises and for the same side of the domestic issue in registration, and then we joined, we on a bipartisan basis in a bicameral, bipartisan grouping, to try to bring some sense into the lobbying registration issue in our country, and I must say, when we proceeded on this pathway we felt proud of ourselves in crafting a pretty good product to present to the Congress of the United States and to the people. Even though we even left some cracks open, we believe, even in foreign registration and in domestic registration, nevertheless it was a good product.

For instance, one hybrid situation arises even today. Suppose a trade association has as part of its clientele two foreign governments that are involved in a multi, multifaceted trade association. Should they not register under our proposition in the FARA, in the Foreign Agents Registration Act, or under the domestic commercial registration? I believe that registration under the domestic would be enough, but the presence of two foreign governments in a hundred trade association kind of grouping might require FARA. We have got to clear all of that up.

But the point is it is a long way forward in doing what the American people have always wanted us to do, is get a handle on lobbying registration. Alas, somewhere down the line, probably because of action in the other Chamber, a mix was added to this issue when they wandered into the ethics side of reform measures, and that is what brings us to a confusing point where we find ourselves now. We are mixing the registration of lobbyists with gift ban for Members of Congress. It may be germane; we never really got a ruling on that, but apparently we are beyond that now.

But I find myself very reluctant now to have the enthusiastic support I originally had for our lobbying registration efforts. I still have that, and it still will compel me to vote for the bill at the end, but I have to be candid with both the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] and others, that it really is, I believe, a blow to our lobbying registration efforts to have mixed into it the ethics question of the ban.

Madam Speaker, I will support the bill because I want to honor my commitment, and I think we are doing justice to the Congress in pursuing lobbying registration, collection, and reform. So I am in a very uncomfortable position, but that is not new. I will honor the commitment I made to pursue the passage of this legislation.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his cooperation in this process, and I assure him that as we deal with this matter in conference, if we get to conference today, we will take into consideration all the concerns the gentleman has.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Texas very quickly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Madam Speaker, my concern is not with the lobbying registration portion of the bill but the prohibition of gifts to Members.

Would it not be better to have a requirement that a gift of any kind of character be reported both by the donor and the donee?

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, if I may take back my time, I favored that from the beginning. I felt that if we were going to mix apples with oranges here, at least the oranges should be in the nature of full disclosure, not a ban. That was my personal preference.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield just briefly?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield briefly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If that were done, then the public would be able to compare what gifts we have received and the votes we have made to see if there is any correlation rather than the inference that we leave by passing this bill that there is some connection between the two.

Mr. GEKAS. That is right.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, a number of questions have come to my attention regarding the application of this legislation to specific organizations which engage in lobbying activities. For example, this bill will generally require a lobbyist for a foreign commercial entity to register with the new Office of Lobbying Registration and Public Disclosure. The same requirement applies to a lobbyist for a trade association whose membership includes one or more foreign corporations. It is my view that such a trade association, which is registered to lobby with the Office of Lobbying Registration, would not also register under FARA simply because a minority of its members were owned or controlled by the government of the country in which they are based.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER].

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Speaker, I rise in reluctant support of the legislation.

I support the provision putting in section 201 of title 18 the supervising ethics office rules as specifying what officials can, and cannot, receive. Especially since the 1970's, as the rules in each branch of Government have changed, officials have had to take the rules of their branch with the utmost seriousness.

The history and procedures for this provision warrant some discussion. While each branch's internal ethics offices have roots going back to the Constitution, it was not until the post-Watergate era that we saw the creation in the late 1970's of the Office of Government Ethics, the congressional ethics committees, and the Judicial Conference's Judicial Ethics Committee.

From the post-Watergate creation of these offices, it was always intended that such offices give interpretations that would establish the law to be followed regarding what can be received. Section 201(c) of title 18, by excepting what is received that is provided by law, had always made room for such a mechanism of authoritative guidance. No one familiar with the laws creating these offices imagined that an officer in any branch, who understood from the interpretations of his ethics office that he was allowed to receive something, would then discover a second, different view was held by the authorities who press charges under section 201(c).

In the face of some dispute of this principle—to the peril of officials in all three branches—Congress in 1989, by enacting section 7353 of title 5, sought to codify that principle of the rules and interpretations of each branch providing authoritative guidance. A floor discussion between two principal authors of the 1989 Ethics Act, Representative FAZIO and Representative MCCOLLUM, had expressed again this principle. This current provision represents the ultimate codification step for this long-standing principle.

The complexity and changes of ethnic rules and interpretations, and the resulting need for an appropriate procedure under section 201(c), can be shown by an example. Take the case of an official in any of the three branches with a law degree who in 1988 accepted private reimbursement for a trip for himself and his spouse to a domestic or foreign bar conference, arranged by a local bar group as a recognition of his work.

Was he right in how he resolved the question of whether he could accept the trip, one of those many questions that arise all the time in this context? The whole idea of having an ethics office in each branch is so that, in such situations, where there is a need for guidance, the official can depend on what his ethics office's interpretations said in 1988 could, or could not, be accepted under the contemporary rules. It should not depend on some second, alternative, external judgment under section 201(c) by those not involved in that branch's ethics interpretations. Yet a perfectly ethical legislator, agency lawyer, or even judge could find himself the target of charges as a result of following his own branch's rules, and without procedures to protect him, could even find himself before a jury for resolving what is, after all, a question of legal interpretation of rules of a kind that Federal officials have to make every day.

This amendment of section 201(c), in light of that history and purpose, intends for the protection of the ethical Federal official to impose certain requirements. By directly amending the description of the elements of an offense under this statute, it requires that any charge must explicitly allege, as such an element of the offense, that each item of challenged reimbursement or receipt was not authorized by the Federal ethics rules of that branch effective at the time the item was received. If the official disputes this, a court, on a motion to dismiss, would review such allegations as a matter of law item by item, requiring a listing of the items at issue, possibly with current input from the ethics office of that branch for guidance.

This in an example stated, the charges against the agency lawyer, legislator, or judge going to the bar conference would be dismissed unless they explicitly alleged that the ethics rules in that branch in 1988 forbid a reimbursed visit to such a bar conference, and unless the allegation that the rules so forbid was shown to be true as a matter of law upon the requisite itemization and testing by motion.

Only in this way can officials who acted consistent with the interpretations of their supervising ethics offices, including the congressional ethics committees, at the applicable time have that recognized in all pending and future cases, whether the issue arose under the rules 10 years ago, now, or 10 years hence. This will bring to fruition elaborate 20-years evolution of the elaborate ethics apparatus—the Office of Government Ethics, the congressional ethics committees, and the Judicial Conference's ethics and conduct committees—in each branch of our Government.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to what I believe to be a half-hearted and not altogether honest attempt at lobbying reform. It is only half a loaf. Even if it were a completely good lobbying bill, it does not go far enough, and it never will.

Yes, it bans meals, dinners, and gifts from lobbyists, but it does not ban meals, gifts, and dinners from corporate representatives back home. Common Cause and The New York Times have editorialized against it. They do not think it goes far enough.

So even if we support this bill and it passes, we are still going to catch hell from the newspapers and from the tabloids that want to raise heck with us. If we want to go out and have a dinner or a golf game with a hometown corporate leader, the press is still going to condemn us even if this passes.

This bill does not cover the LSO's, the legislative service organizations. We have read lots and lots about abuses by those organizations and the improper contacts they have had with various representatives around the world. There are big abuses. This bill does not do anything about that. The bill does not affect the nonprofit entities and compel folks like Ralph Nader's Public Citizen to disclose their contributors. Just about 2 weeks ago a man from Public Citizen testified that they do not disclose their contributors, even though more than one person bragged that he's raised $100,000 for them in a day. The bill does not touch executive branch lobbyists or White House consultants.

For real reform, what I believe we need to do is go back to the original prompter of this legislation. Senator PAUL WELLSTONE did not have as bad an idea—full disclosure of all gifts, all dinners, and all games by anyone, not relative, over $20 in value, and he put the burden on the lobbyist to make the disclosure.

Mr. FAZIO. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, I will not yield because I do not have enough time.

Mr. FAZIO. I will get the gentleman some time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Madam Speaker, if we are worried about disclosure, we should not accept the gift, we should not go to the dinner, we should not go to the golf game. Disclosure is the best reform, and this is a half-hearted attempt at reform.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. KENNELLY). The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has expired.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Madam Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to engage in a dialog with me. The gentleman is a friend of mine, and we have had many, many meetings and conversations about this bill, and I want to try to clarify something.

Anybody who lobbies for anybody, spending 10 percent or more of their time, is covered by this bill, so if people are lobbying the executive branch, for example, they would be covered by this bill if it is more than 10 percent of their time. But I want to ask the gentleman, does he support the position of those who oppose this bill? I ask that because in all our conversations I do not remember the gentleman bringing me the arguments of The New York Times or the Common Cause organization. I ask the gentleman, where does the gentleman stand on this provision from their standpoint?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will yield so I can reply, first of all, the 10 percent does not mean anything. Who is a lobbyist? What is a lobbyist?

Is the gentleman telling me that a corporate executive who devotes all of his time to the affairs of the company and takes you out to a golf game or a dinner, but does not spend 10 percent of his time is not a lobbyist? I suggest that he is.

Mr. FAZIO. Madam Speaker, anyone who spends 10 percent of their time lobbying the executive or legislative branch, regardless of what they do with the rest of their time, is covered as a lobbyist.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Madam Speaker, I would suggest that that phrase is riddled with loopholes. I wish I had known that Common Cause was going to come out against this bill. I agree with them.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, although I recognize, as the chairman of the subcommittee has already said, that there are improvements to be made along the way in conference.

Madam Speaker, I rise in qualified support of this lobbying reform bill. I say qualified, for it is clear that this bill does not do enough to close the loopholes of our ethics laws.

These loopholes are exactly what is feeding the public perception of a Congress for sale. With all we have heard and seen of public outrage on this issue, I expected we would do better on this bill.

Nevertheless, under H.R. 823 we are taking first steps to improve the situation: We are improving the registration of lobbyists, and increasing reporting requirements for some meals and gifts. That's admirable.

On the big issues, however, I am afraid we have missed the boat. There are loopholes in this legislation. We must address them in conference with the other body, or this bill will have been a wasted exercise. Worse, it will fuel the public anger, and perception that Government access and power are for sale in the Nation's Capital. In a world where working middle-class families see every day that there is no free lunch, we're changing the rules, and saying "there's no free lunch—except for Congressmen."

Most glaringly, H.R. 823 prohibits lobbyists from paying for travel, meals, and entertainment for Members of Congress—but turns around and allows the employers of lobbyists to pick up the tab. With the lobbyist in the room. That is, in the words of a wise old man, a "difference that makes no difference."

On this issue the other body has adopted a much stronger piece of legislation, definitively closing loopholes and legal gimmicks, and dispelling the notion that any Member of Congress is for sale.

We should follow the lead of the other body, and adopt these real reform provisions in conference. I support H.R. 823 today because it's this bill or no bill, and I think we would do a disservice to stop the process.

But if any ethics reform is to earn my final support, it must contain comprehensive lobbying and disclosure provisions, and move to restore credibility to this institution. We can, and we must, do better. But on this vote we should not let the perfect be the enemy of the good.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding me the time and I congratulate the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] for an extraordinary difficult job to be performed in this bill.

Why do I say that? Because we are dealing with perception in this bill, in my opinion, more than reality.

Members of this Congress and members of the legislative body that I served with in the past, the Senate of Maryland, are not subject to being influenced in their votes by the buying of meals or the playing of a golf game. The fact of the matter is, however, that we have had gridlock and we have not moved forward.

My opinion is that it is largely a matter of philosophy. There are significant differences between the executive and the legislative branches. But our public has said the reason for it is that we have the special interests.

The reason is that we have lobbyists. The reason is that we have some relationship with them that they do not feel is good.

Now, there are some who want the perfect who will say, "Let's not take the good." There are some who editorialize and write in that way. The common cause is moving forward, not having the perfect be the enemy of the good.

I have had some involvement with this legislation. I believe it is a step forward. It is a step to try to say to the American public, "We want you to know what is happening, No. 1, and No. 2, we are going to stop letting some of the things happen that you feel are undermining the doing of your business."

Why? Because in democracy we must have the confidence of our people. Whatever the reality may be, if we have lost the confidence of our people, we will not be successful as a democracy.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation and move it forward. It is, difficult piece of legislation, because all of us feel, first of all, that we are somehow personally being perceived as not operating honestly. I think we are.

Are there some who fall short of that? There are. There are human beings in this body. There are some who fall short in our society. But the overall majority are doing the business as we see fit.

But let us try in this small way to correct the perception, to make sure we have full lobbying disclosure and make sure the public knows we are not taking the gifts that they believe are affecting our actions.

I congratulate again the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] for the effort they have made to move this legislation forward. It is important that we pass it.

It is on suspension, so it will be difficult. We will have to join together and vote in significant numbers to do that. I suggest to those who fear this legislation that if this legislation does not move forward, it will not be what I believe to be a reasonable effort and a reasonable compromise that passes, it will ultimately be a more Draconian, less fair proposition that will ultimately pass.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of S. 349, the Lobbying Disclosure Act and urge my colleagues to join me in moving ahead with this important reform measure.

The bill before us today continues congressional reform and makes significant changes in current lobbying registration law. The Bryant bill demands greater accountability than ever before of those who lobby the executive branch and the Congress.

S. 349 requires far greater registration by lobbyists and disclosure of their activities. Unlike current law, S. 349 requires all professional lobbyists to register if they lobby executive branch officials, legislative branch officials, and congressional employees regarding any changes in Federal policy, not just legislation. The new requirements would also require those who do direct and grass roots lobbying to register.

Lobbyists are also required to file more detailed reports of their activities, including estimates of lobbying expenses, identification of their clients, and issues on which they lobby.

There are provisions of this bill that I do not like. However, Chairman BRYANT has crafted a reasonable and responsible response to sometimes unreasonable and unrealistic demands. The balanced legislation that he has structured will continue to allow Members to represent and communicate with their constituents and their representatives while ensuring that ethical standards are upheld and are easily understood by all involved.

There are those in this House who would like to delay and not move this legislation forward today. In my opinion, that would be a mistake. To think that we are able to do less than the Bryant bill is to ignore the realities. To go beyond the reasonable and effective structure of the Bryant bill is to overreact, and indeed to insult the basic decency and honesty of public officials and their employees.

Clearly, however, it is time to move on. Each day that we delay this legislation and allow ourselves to be distracted by these discussions, we put off the real work of this Congress. It is time to move ahead past this issue and focus our energy, our intelligence, and our commitment on the issues of the day which will greatly affect the everyday lives of our constituents—health care reform, meaningful and effective crime legislation, and welfare reform.

In the last election we heard a clear message from the American public to change the way we do business. Those who heard that call as merely a call to publicly and regularly lash ourselves are as mistaken as those who think we should do nothing. This legislation is a step forward. As we address this issue, let us also remember that it is time to move forward on the agenda of this Congress and the American people. I for one am happy to have this bill off the to do list and urge my colleagues to join me in support.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. DELAY. Madam Speaker, it never ceases to amaze me why we pass legislation around here. The distinguished chairman of the Democratic Caucus says we have got to pass this legislation, let me see now, because of perception in the country. Rather than standing up and defending the institution, we have got to pass a piece of legislation because of the perception of the country.

The other reason is to pass this legislation because it could get worse, Members. So set yourselves up in this little way, because you could be set up even worse if we get our hands on this once again.

Look, I think we have enough restrictions and regulations and rules right now that regulate the way that we go. But if we have got to do something that I support, full disclosure, who are you tell me I am dishonest because I go out with a lobbyist? And many of you have said it. How dare you say that I am bought and paid for because I have dinner with a lobbyist?

It is my constituents who have the right to decide that, not you.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEWIS of California. On that point, some years ago on a white steed, Jerry Brown was going to improve government in California, former Governor Jerry Brown. He passed a bill that would limit to like $15 a month money that could be spent by lobbyists.

Fifteen years ago. Everybody knows how much the legislative process improved since then. My friend the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] would attest how great it is in California right now.

For Lord's sake, this is paying lip service to improving government in the name of doing something, and you are doing nothing at all.

Mr. DELAY. I hear the gentleman's words. The gentleman is so right.

If you do not want to do these things, do not do them. But at least be honest about it and say we will have full disclosure. You will decide how to operate yourself, how you will conduct yourself in working your job, and then disclose everything to the members of your constituency back home and let them decide whether they can link it up or not.

This is ridiculous. This is outrageous. This is no fix. What you have done, as I said earlier on the rule, is set up the Kay Bailey Hutchison syndrome. You have set up new criteria by which you can be charged, whether you are innocent or not, and they will bring you and drag you through all the processes that they can drag you through, and you have got to prove you are innocent.

You know, any time we are charged, we are guilty until we can prove our innocence. And what you are doing with this bill is setting up new criteria, new restrictions, new rules, by which we can be caught in a very innocent moment and be charged and drug through the mud.

The only way to fix this is through full disclosure. I urge a no vote on the bill.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROOKS. Madam Speaker, it is with some regret that I rise to oppose the legislation now being considered by the House. I realize the good intentions and the motivations that lie beyond trying to craft a legislative solution to the perceived problem surrounding certain lobbying activities and gifts to Members of Congress.

I know JOHN BRYANT, chairman of the great Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations is one, in my judgment, of the brightest and most dedicated Members we have in this body. He is from Texas, and I am very proud of him. He is an outstanding and able Member.

But I think in this instance, in a vast majority of the situations, the problem is a perceived problem and not an actual problem. And the legislation does raise some disturbing questions about the rights of every American to redress their grievances before the Government and to inform and educate decision makers who, after all, are just their elected representatives. Who else are they going to talk to?

Teachers, doctors, restaurant owners, pipefitters, oil workers, refineries, chemical plants, every segment of our society, every segment of our economy, all of those great groups are entitled to pursue their rights and make their views known to their representatives.

We do not have to do what they say, but they are entitled to be able to come and make a pitch. And I think there is no way that any set of lawmakers, decision makers, can operate with perfect knowledge in a vacuum without the benefit of information received from the multifaceted life that we live without the benefit of those who know best and who know firsthand.

I personally do not take warmly to the idea that seems to lie beneath the surface of this pending legislation, this general effort, that I would ever be influenced to lift a finger on behalf of somebody who bought me a $10.95 dinner. I would rather eat at home with my wonderful wife. She is a wonderful cook. It is much more pleasant to be home. And I do, 98 percent of the time. In the fog and panic surrounding the debate on this issue, common sense has been left at the door in favor of unfounded suspicions. It is time to bring common sense through the door and back into the Chamber here.

I want to make one final point. I had originally planned to process a bill through the full committee in regular order. However, given that this initiative is a top priority of the bipartisan leadership of the House, I agreed to having the bill come directly to the Floor for consideration before the Easter district work period. I do not, however, view today's approach as setting a precedent that will be applicable to Committee on the Judiciary considerations of future legislative proposals in this field, or in any other.

In plain language, I think the bill is not necessary.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE].

Mr. HOKE. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I agree there is a lot of fog and panic, and we need to bring some common sense to this debate. I would like to bring a different perspective, the perspective of the private sector, where I just came from not more than 15 months ago.

But I have to tell you that it does, before I share those perspectives, it does strike me as being a little bit disingenuous that we are arguing over a $10.95 meal, when in fact the average Member of Congress takes $250,000 every election cycle in PAC money. What is the difference when there is special interest money funding congressional campaigns year after year after year to the tune of right now an average of $250,000, that we are speaking about this as a different way to purchase influence or access.

In any event, let me tell you how we dealt with this in my own company, because I built a company from nothing, and we were in the retail business of selling car phones. Naturally we had a lot of suppliers.

We wanted to guard against the possibility that some employee might be overpaying for something because of influence purchased as the result of gifts or entertainment.

What we did was we went to a zero tolerance type of approach, where we said you may not accept any gifts, any meals, any entertainment, any golf, whatsoever. We just cut it off completely.

I frankly think that is what we ought to do. We should not have a convoluted system where we have certain exceptions for people that use less than 10 percent of their time. We should just make it very clear, very simple, very easy.

This is another ridiculous bill that has all kinds of exceptions. It is difficult to follow. I am going to vote for it, reluctantly. I think we ought to have zero tolerance.

I would like to make a couple other observations. The gentleman from Texas talks about the problem here is the perception, not the reality. Come on, guys, what is politics? If in politics perception is not reality, where is perception and reality? Heavenly days, that is what politics is all about. Of course perception is reality. That is what this is all about.

The other thing I would like to say is this does not prevent people from going out to dinner or playing golf. We just have to pay for it. Just like everybody else, we just have to pay for it. It is not a big deal.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. SCHENK].

☐ 1410

Ms. SCHENK. Madam Speaker, it is time for this House to finally take the first steps toward reforming the way that we do business in this body. This legislation, which is strongly supported by the freshman Democratic class in this House, represents a first step.

Yes, many of us would like to go further, perhaps even an outright ban on any gifts or perks. But this is where we stand today.

I would just like to say to my good friend, my colleague for whom I have enormous respect, the gentleman from Redlands, CA, that I served in Sacramento under what we call the two hamburgers and a coke rule. And it did work. It worked for the people of California.

What it did was it banned lobbyists from having big private dinners in smoky back rooms of restaurants where they had unfair access to legislators and executive branch officials. It leveled the playing field.

No, it did not eliminate the crooks. No, it did not eliminate those who want to do something under the table. No law will ever eliminate those kinds of people.

What it does, it levels the playing field. The American people have demanded this reform in the last election, in town meetings, every one of us who went through the campaign. I think that it just defies our God-given common sense to say it does not go far enough so let us not vote for it at all.

If we defeat this bill, we break faith with the American people. I ask my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY].

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to this misguided approach. If indeed, as the gentleman from Texas told us in his initial remarks, this is an issue that only affects 1 percent of the Members, we are going to basically put 99 percent of the Members by his own words under this micro-managed cockamamie plan that he has got to somehow make 435 of us defendants and having to hire lawyers to determine who and when we can go out to lunch with.

Nothing could be more ludicrous. This is like treatment Members of Congress like some kindergarten kids that we have got to somehow micro-manage and pass laws to correct. It is just absolutely ludicrous. I find it personally demeaning. I think every Member here should find it personally demeaning to think that we have to operate under some kind of rules like this and then somehow to have to look at that chart every time we determine whether we are going to go out of the house or not or leave the office.

I am really disappointed, frankly. I have a great deal of respect for my friend from Texas, who I serve with on the Committee on Energy and Commerce, but in this case, I think he has entirely missed the boat. If he wants to make some things that are reportable and allow the press to do what they do best, and that is to report all of these things and let the Member make his own explanations, that is fine. But do not try to tell me that I cannot do this or I cannot do that.

I am a duly-elected Member of this House of Representatives, by 570,000 people. I resent the fact that I have to follow these stupid rules to tell me how to live my life.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OXLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I understand the sentiments behind the gentleman's words, but the point is that we are only relating this to people who are registered lobbyists, who in effect are the lawyers in the courtroom. They should not be able to take the judge to lunch. That is what this is about.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, my only problem with the lobbyist part of it is these gift bans and the so-called bans that we are going to have, which are going to make everybody in this House hire a lawyer just to make sure that they do not get stuck like KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON got stuck.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BROWDER].

Mr. BROWDER. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this reform and the work of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINGERHUT].

Mr. FINGERHUT. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I thank the gentleman from Texas for his work.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINGERHUT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the legislation. I simply want to say that I am delighted that this is a tougher and tighter bill than many of us may have expected. It deserves our strong support. I compliment all of those who worked so hard to bring this measure to the floor, including the chairman and the gentleman in the well.

Mr. FINGERHUT. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

I simply want to take one moment to say that with all this debate we sometimes forget what this bill is about.

There are a couple simple questions before the House. First, should everyone who lobbies, who actually engages in the business of professional lobbying register and disclose to the American public all those moneys that they spend to influence the course of legislation? The answer is yes.

Second, should those people who register as lobbyists and are engaged in this business be prohibited from providing direct financial benefit to Members of Congress? The answer is also yes.

We have heard a lot of opposition, some of it very principled indeed. Members who simply disagree with this approach. Others have been using the argument that we do not go far enough, but Common Cause, the New York Times oppose this legislation so we should, too.

Let me say this: The role of the New York Times, the role of Common Cause is to push us. It is to criticize. It is to say what the outer limits of things are.

I started in politics as the chairman of Common Cause in the State of Ohio and am a proud member of Common Cause, but I understand what they are supposed to be doing. They are supposed to point out exceptions, some of the exceptions which we have agreed to at the request of the minority. Our job is to say this is time to move forward, that this is legislation that takes a significant step forward. Our job is to tell the American people that this is important, that we can make a difference in the way that this body runs, if we support it. We need to support it today.

We are bringing it up under Suspension of the Rules. Two-thirds of this body need to stand up and tell the American people it is important. I believe we will do that. I believe we should do that and send the message out to the American people that we have heard what they are concerned about. We are responding. We are going to make the decisions in this body in the best interests of the people, not because of the special interests.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

(Mr. HYDE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HYDE. Madam Speaker, I just would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question so I understand about this bill.

As I look at it, it looks like a painting by Picasso. I mean, touched with genius but a little oddly shaped.

Is it true, let us say RJR Nabisco Holdings pays for my way over to Majorca to address a group of their executives over there and take 7 days in the trip and talk to people about the emotional disturbances involved in selecting French pastries or something and come back to this country. As along as they disclose it, that is perfectly all right. But their lobbyists cannot buy me lunch at Bull Feathers. Is that true?

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, the answer is, the gentleman must perform his speaking duties within 48 hours of arriving and leave within 48 hours of speaking, and they must disclose every 6 months all that they spent on the gentleman on that trip.

If the gentlemen can withstand that public scrutiny, he can take the trip. But if he cannot, he should not take the trip.

Presently, that is not the case.

Mr. HYDE. But they have to pay for that trip.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA].

Mr. MICA. Madam Speaker, let me speak again to some of the loopholes of this bill. Probably the biggest flaw in this legislation is the definition of lobbyists and the 10 percent requirement under this bill we have heard bantered around today. That is the loophole that will allow the 20,000 attorneys in this town to still conduct business as usual.

Ten percent is a loophole that we are creating and an opportunity for people to become involved in this process without reporting.

Let me say that this bill, and I want to correct my statement earlier, this bill creates civil penalties instead of the current criminal penalties. The civil penalties are enforced by the Department of Justice. Which is stronger, criminal or civil penalties?

I did not say this would allow the continued trips to Florida and other glorious spots. Common Cause stated that. I am not an attorney. Common Cause and their legal people have read this bill and said that it does not prohibit such trips.

This bill has loopholes that the lobbiest does not even have under the current law, exemptions for the $2,500, the $5,000 organization exemptions, the 10-percent exemptions.

I would ask the gentleman, why not, if someone is paid money or receives money from clients to influence legislation or the executive branch, anyone, then it should be reported: If someone is a paid as a lobbyist, then simply report it.

Again, this bill has loopholes big enough to drive a lobbyist's limousine through. What is sad about this, too, is that it creates a farce on the American people. It does not address the problems of foreign lobby registration or the revolving door, the things that people are fed up with.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Madam Speaker, with all deference to the sponsors of this bill, and as one who has been involved with serious reform efforts here in the Congress, I have to say that I think this legislation is an affront to this body. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] is correct. If we are going to clean things up, realistically, let us have full public disclosure. Let us just disclose it all. That would help restore confidence in this institution.

I might say, full public disclosure is also the answer to campaign finance reform. However, this legislation is not enforceable. Someone once said that unenforceable laws bring derision on the system. I suggest that this proposal is not realistically enforceable, and will bring greater derision on the Congress than it currently suffers.

The other gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], in his appeal to common sense, stated the case very well. We may think we are addressing the problem here, but we are only addressing perceptions. If we would address reality, the perceptions would correct themselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. KENNELLY). The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] has expired.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. ABERCROMBIE].

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will start quickly. There are not five people on this floor or listening over C-Span that even know what this bill is about. The bill being passed out on the floor right here is not the bill the Members are voting on. Nobody can come to this floor and say they even know what they are voting on, and I will bet there are not five people that know that there is going to be an independent branch agency set up in the executive government that does not even exist now, called, or excuse me, the Department of Justice, that is being passed out on the floor, does not exist any longer. It is now the Office of Lobbying Registration and Public Disclosure, who is going to set up rules, regulations, cross-indexing, filing. This has not even had a hearing in this House.

If the Members want to vote for something because they are panicked about the public, what the hell are they going in front of their constituents for to tell them that they deserve to give you a vote? If you want to pass lobbying registration, then do it, but do not come down on the floor because you are scared of your own constituents. Vote on a bill that you have read before you cast a vote, if you really mean to be a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Madam Speaker, I regret having to respond so firmly to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. ABERCROMBIE], but if he is talking about people who have not read the bill, I suggest the gentleman speak for himself.

The provision to which he has referred has been in this bill since November. It has been well-read, well-stated, and there have been hearings upon it. I regret that he was not part of the process.

Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Utah [Ms. SHEPHERD].

Ms. SHEPHERD. Madam Speaker, I first want to commend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] and the Democratic leadership for having the courage to come forward with this bill. Precisely what they were concerned would happen is happening, which is that people who do not want it to pass at all are trying to pick it apart and say it is not good enough.

Madam Speaker, let me say what the people want. It does not matter if we are talking about the Salt Lake Tribune, where 75 percent of the people think that it is a conflict of interest for members of any legislative body to have lobbyists spend money on them, or whether we are talking about any poll, hundreds of polls taken across this country by the people of this country. They think that spending money to talk to us is a conflict of interest.

Madam Speaker, it has been said here that this is half a loaf. That is wrong. It is not half a loaf. It is impossible to say that it is a full loaf, but I can tell the Members, it is every slice but the heel, and I invite each of the Members who think this bill is not strong enough to join with me in coming years and we will whittle away at it and we will make it stronger every year, because that is our responsibility to the people of this country.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Speaker, let me say that I am for full reporting. I believe there should be instilled in the public, confidence in this body. If we have lunch with somebody and we want to report it, I think that is fine. I think if somebody plays golf with someone, that should be reported. That is fine.

However, here we are, and we are going to impose penalties on people that have lunch with somebody or play golf with somebody, and a much greater issue, as far as influence is concerned, are the contributions that we get for our campaigns.

Many people will vote for this legislation today and talk with self-righteous indignation if we vote against it, and they will go out and take a $5,000 contribution from a PAC and say that does not have as much influence as if they have lunch with somebody. That makes no sense. There is no logic to it.

Madam Speaker, I think that the best way to address this problem, if we want to instill public confidence, is to have the full reportability. That is fine. For us to say somebody who takes $25 for a lunch with somebody or plays golf with somebody, you have committed a crime, while at the same time you are taking $5,000 from their PAC, that does not make sense.

Mr. GEKAS. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself my remaining time to close debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, I hope I can complete this without using the full 3 minutes, because I think much of what needs to be said has been said.

Madam Speaker, I would simply say this to the comments by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] just a moment ago, and the others preceding him, that the fact of the matter is that campaign money goes into a campaign, and the money we are talking about here in one way or another ends up in our pockets, or relieves us of an expenditure. I think that is the difference.

I would say one additional thing, we are also well underway here with a dramatic revision of the campaign laws, so it is not as though we are not paying attention to that.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Madam Speaker, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Madam Speaker, briefly I would say that anybody in this body who believes that a lunch would have more influence than a $5,000 contribution from a PAC I do not think is living in the real world.

Mr. BRYANT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Maybe a rhetorical question will do some good.

Does the gentleman think the rules ought to permit him to go and play golf and have a lobbyist, whose job it is to convince him to vote for his client and maybe against the people that are sitting here with us today, that the lobbyist ought to be able to pay for the gentleman's greens fees?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. If the gentleman will continue to yield, if he gives me a $1,000 or $5,000 contribution, or gives that to you, if I were going to be corrupt, which I am not, but if I were going to be corrupt, that would have a much greater influence on me than a round of golf.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, we are going to deal with contributions later, but we are dealing with the free golf games today.

My question is this, does the gentleman think that the rules of this place ought to permit him to have a lobbyist, whose job it is to influence him, pay for his greens fees?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. He is not influencing me if I play a round of golf with him, for crying out loud.

Mr. BRYANT. Very well.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Let my constituents judge by having me report all that. I am for complete reportability, but my constituents can judge better than that.

Mr. BRYANT. I thank the gentleman. In responding to my remarks, he has placed this issue in clear relief. The plain fact is this. We have a bill on the floor today which is going to say that henceforth, a lobbyist whose only job is to come and influence us cannot pay for our greens fees. We ought to pay for them ourselves. He cannot buy us meals. We ought to pay for them ourselves. He cannot provide entertainment. If we want entertainment, we should pay for it ourselves.

That is what is at issue here today. I regret having to deal with this. I will stick by my guns from a moment ago. I think it is a fact that 99 percent of the Members of this House are not influenced by those expenditures, but the perception that we are, to a large extent, has been fostered by the comments like those we have heard today from the other side of the aisle, as well as a few on our side of the aisle. Unfortunately, we have to deal with it.

The fact of the matter is that we have got a bill on the floor today that deals with it in a way that makes sense. I do not know about these loopholes. I heard the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Mica] talking a while ago about loopholes, and he keeps talking about loopholes. I do not see any loopholes. There are no loopholes in this bill. That is the fact. Members cannot make those expenditures anymore.

Mr. ROSE. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ROSE. Madam Speaker, just one question. May I see a copy of the bill?

Mr. BRYANT. It is right next to the gentleman.

Mr. ROSE. I have a Xerox copy. Has the bill been printed?

Mr. BRYANT. I have to refer to the staff.

Mr. ROSE. The staff says that it has not been printed.

Mr. BRYANT. Very well. What is the difference?

Mr. ROSE. I do not have any questions. The bill has not been printed and nobody has a copy.

Mr. BRYANT. The bill is sitting on the podium right in front of the gentleman, if he wants to read it, and furthermore, I would say the bill has been out since the subcommittee reported it out last November. So if any Member has not read it, it is not the fault of the subcommittee.

Madam Speaker, I urge Members to vote for the bill and do a good deed for this body and this institution.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 823, the Lobbying Disclosure Act of 1993. As chairman of the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance, I want to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bryant] and his staff for their willingness to work out appropriate language regarding two matters in the bill that affect matters within the jurisdiction of the subcommittee.

First, I would like to comment very briefly on one of the exceptions to the definition of "lobbying contact" in the pending bill. H.R. 823 provides an exception for communications "between officials of a self-regulatory organization recognized by Federal law, and the Federal regulatory agency with jurisdiction over such organization, relating to the regulatory responsibilities of such organization under such law."

This exception is included in the bill in recognition of the fact that certain Federal statutes, such as the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, delegate substantial Federal regulatory responsibilities to private self-regulatory organizations, such as the national securities exchanges and the National Association of Securities Dealers. These organizations exercise these responsibilities in close coordination with and under the supervision of Federal agencies—the Securities and Exchange Commission in the case of securities self-regulatory organizations. Because they share responsibilities under Federal statutes, the communications between these agencies and these self-regulatory organizations are more like communications between two levels of Government than communications between a regulator and a regulated entity.Thus, an exemption parallel to the exemption for communications among Government officials is appropriate.

In a March 9, 1994, letter to Congress, a copy of which I will insert into the Record following the conclusion of my statement, SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt expressed concerns about the impact of the bill on the SEC's ability to work with the various securities self-regulatory organizations on regulatory and enforcement matters. I am pleased that we have been able to work out language which would provide for a narrow exception to the disclosure provisions of the bill. This will allow the self-regulatory organizations to carry out their important responsibilities to assist the Commission in the enforcement of the Federal securities laws, including insider trading, market manipulation, and surveillance and regulation of our Nation's securities markets. The self-regulatory organizations would remain subject to the provisions of H.R. 823 will respect to their communications with Congress and all parts of the executive branch other than the Federal agency with jurisdiction over such organizations.

I also want to note that the bill deletes a provision which appeared in earlier drafts of H.R. 823 which would have repealed section 12(i) of the Public Utilities Holding Company Act of 1935 [PUHCA]. The Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance had not had an opportunity to fully review the implications of such an amendment to PUHCA and determine its impact on the protections afforded to investors, consumers and the public under PUHCA. I therefore appreciate the willingness of the gentleman from Texas to defer action on this matter and allow our subcommittee to undertake such a review and determine whether repeal of the PUHCA lobbying disclosure provision is needed.

Again, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Bryant] and his staff for their willingness to accommodate the concerns that Chairman Dingell and I had with respect to these matters, and I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission,
Washington, DC, March 9, 1994.

Hon. John Bryant,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Dear Chairman Bryant: I am writing to comment on the application of the Lobbying Disclosure Act, H.R. 823, to the unique relationship between the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") and the self-regulatory organizations ("SROs") that, under SEC supervision, handle much of the day-to-day regulation of the securities industry.

Under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, there are four types of self-regulatory organizations: national securities exchanges, such as the New York Stock Exchange and American Stock Exchange; a national securities association, the National Association of Securities Dealers ("NASD"); securities clearing agencies, such as the National Securities Clearing Corporation; and, for some purposes, the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board ("MSRB").

As their name implies, the self-regulatory organizations other than the MSRB are responsible under the Exchange Act for developing and enforcing SRO rules their members. (The MSRB develops rules for the municipal securities industry but has no enforcement role.) The Exchange Act requires that all SRO rules, rule changes and policies be filed with the SEC and, with certain exceptions, proposed SRO rules may not take effect until the SEC approves them. In fiscal year 1993, the SROs filed over 450 proposed rules with the SEC.

In addition, the SEC has an active program of SRO inspection, to confirm that the SROs are fulfilling their responsibilities under the Exchange Act. In fiscal year 1993, the SEC conducted 40 SRO inspections. The SEC also conducts examinations of firms already examined by the SROs to assure the quality of SRO broker-dealer examinations. In fiscal year 1993 the SEC conducted more than 400 such oversight examinations.

The Exchange Act also requires an SRO other than the MSRB to "enforce compliance" by its members and associated persons with the Exchange Act itself. The SROs have broad powers, under the Exchange Act, to discipline their members and persons associated with them, including the power to censure, to fine, and to bar from membership or association. Since the Exchange Act requires every broker-dealer to be a member of the NASD, or to effect transactions only on a national securities exchange of which it is a member, the SROs' power to bar a firm from membership, or a person from association, is essentially the power to exclude a firm or person from a substantial part of the securities industry.

In fiscal year 1993, the SROs reported more than 1,000 disciplinary actions to the SEC. A firm or person subject to an SRO sanction may, under the Exchange Act, appeal the sanction to the SEC: in fiscal year 1993 there were 71 such appeals. In cases in which the SRO's preliminary investigation suggests that an SRO sanction may be inadequate—such as suspected insider trading—the SROs refer enforcement matters to the Commission. There were over 150 such enforcement referrals in fiscal year 1993.

These figures give some sense of the breadth and frequency of contact between the SEC and the SROs. This communication is essentially governmental; the SEC and the SROs communicate about how best to exercise the responsibility they share under the Exchange Act for policing and overseeing the securities industry. Thus, for the same reasons that communications between federal and state or local officials are exempt under the Lobbying Disclosure Act, we believe that communications between the SEC and the SROs should be exempt. To paraphrase the Senate Report, it would not be "appropriate to require public officials at one level of government," the SROs, "to register as lobbyists when they express their views to public officials at another level of government," the SEC.

Specifically, we would like to see an addition to the list of exclusions from "lobbying contact" for communications "between officials of a securities self-regulatory organization and of the Securities and Exchange Commission." The SROs would thus remain subject to the Lobbying Disclosure Act with respect to their communications with Congress and all parts of the Executive Branch other than the SEC. The SROs would not be required to report, however, all the communications they have, many of which are required by law, with the SEC.

If this approach is not acceptable to the Committee, we would like to discuss alternatives with you. If you have any questions about this, please do not hesitate to contact us.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR LEVITT,
Chairman.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member intends to support the Lobbying Disclosure Act as it is a small step forward in providing increased disclosure of lobbying efforts. This measure represents the latest effort in a long-standing, if intermittent, attempt by Congress to rewrite Federal lobby disclosure laws. This Member certainly supports the provisions providing for the registration of all those who lobby Members of Congress, congressional staff, and executive branch officials. The measure also requires lobbyists to file semiannual reports on what legislation, regulatory actions, grants, and projects they are lobbying. These semiannual reports must also disclose the lobbyists' income from clients or the total expenses their organization has incurred for lobbying, including grassroots activity.

However, this Member must also express reservations regarding the provisions which ban lobbyists from providing meals, entertainment, travel, or gifts to Members of Congress or their staffs. This reservation is expressed because this seems a disingenuous attempt at such a ban because the measure is structured to allow a lobbyist's employer, or the organization or company that retains a lobbyist, to pay for such items and activities. The so-called ban is simply an illusion because as a practical matter, organizations and clients—not their lobbyists—pay for these items and activities.

Additionally, while this Member is supportive of the disclosure requirements for lobbyists, the Member has concerns regarding the measure's coverage of only professional lobbyists or paid lobbyists. Full public disclosure must, in this Member's opinion, be extended to all lobbyists—including nonprofit groups that rely on grassroots.

Again, while this Member has a number of reservations regarding this measure, this Member supports the Lobbying Disclosure Act as an overall positive move toward greater disclosure of lobbying activities. It is simply a matter of the public having a right to know about these activities.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my opposition to S. 349, the Lobbying Disclosure Act. While I recognize and support strong efforts to bring more openness and accountability to our legislative process, I do not believe that this legislation sensibly accomplishes this goal. In fact, in some respects S. 349 paints Members as apologists for carrying out the important work which our constituents sent us to this body to perform.

The business of the Congress is ordering the priorities of the millions of people and interests in the country. We accomplish this by listening to the concerns and voices of constituents and others at a variety of times and settings, including over meals or during conferences.

Yet certain provisions in this bill imply that accepting an invitation to a lunch or a dinner is improper, and by accepting such an invitation my decision on a particular issue or piece of legislation will be influenced. This is simply not true, and I believe that most—if not all—of my colleagues would agree to this proposition. And in fact, language in this bill allows Members to accept meals from clients of lobbyists or interest groups, thereby really providing only the appearance of a change in current policy in this area.

Such incidental provisions will have little effect on day-to-day business in Washington. the Congress needs to address the more important and fundamental issues that underlie lobby reform and the public's disenchantment with this institution. The question is not whether Congress is selling votes for baubles and trinkets. They are not and I resent this view. The real question here is how do we expand the ability of more individuals and groups to have a voice in the governing process. This will come through more open, bipartisan cooperation in tackling such issues as crime, health care, and welfare reform.

We in this body need to stop pointing fingers and playing to public hysteria and stereotypes of Congress and get on with the vital legislative business of the Nation. I do not believe that I and my colleagues need to legislate our integrity. Tangible results are what count, not politicking, and the American people know that.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on S. 349.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, I am in opposition to the rule to H.R. 823, the Lobbying Reform and Disclosure Act.

Given the complexity of current congressional lobbying and gift disclosure rules, proper consideration of H.R. 823 is essential. This has not been the procedure. In fact, H.R. 823 was not even considered by the full House Judiciary or Administration committees before being sent, after the House had adjourned for the evening, to the Rules Committee for its "stamp" of approval. Members of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct should also review H.R. 823 but have not had the opportunity to review the bill we are now considering.

This bill should not be considered under "suspension of the rules," which bypasses the normal legislative review process and limits the opportunity to engage in full debate on this important issue. Although H.R. 823 contains improvements in congressional lobbying rules, there are detailed, substantive issues which should be addressed to strengthen the bill.

H.R. 823, as Common Cause points out in its March 23 letter, "fails to end the practices whereby special interests seeking to influence Congress finance recreational travel and provide undisclosed food and entertainment for Members of Congress and their staffs." According to Common Cause, House Members took, during one Congress, 4,000 trips at private expense. Two-thirds of the trips were paid for by corporations and trade groups, and many were to resorts and vacation spots. H.R. 823 should be strengthened to prohibit these types of trips.

I am also concerned that H.R. 823 does not adequately address contributions of foreign governments and lobbyists representing foreign interests to certain foundations and legislative service organizations [LSOs] in the Congress. LSOs and their affiliated organizations should be covered under any new lobbying reform law. These organizations are not included in H.R. 823.

Just as there are organizations that should be covered under H.R. 823, there are individuals who should be included but are not. The role of "consultants" in the executive branch, for example, should be included in the legislation. Certain people represent presidential administrations in the media and function as advisors, however, they are not full-time administration officials. As the minority leader of the House recently detailed in a letter to the Speaker of the House, a provision should be added to H.R. 823 which would disclose the work or possible conflicts of interests of volunteers, national party-paid consultants or special Government employees working within the executive branch by triggering disclosure requirements when an individual in entitled to enter Government offices beyond that access given to the general public. The contents of lobbying reports should be expanded to include significant "consulting" of executive branch activities that influence governmental policy and decisions.

The time to pass lobbying reform legislation is long overdue and I reluctantly rise in support of the bill. However, there is an opportunity to make H.R. 823 a more effective, responsive bill by allowing for consideration of amendments that would address the mentioned weaknesses, and more. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to vote against the proposed rule on H.R. 823 and to vote to provide a vehicle for passage of comprehensive, effective legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. KENNELLY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 349, as amended, insist on the House amendment thereto, and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The question was taken.

Mr. BRYANT. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 315, nays 110, not voting 9, as follows:

A POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE—ALLEGED BREAKDOWN OF COMITY AMONG COMMITTEE MEMBERS IN RELATION TO OVERSIGHT HEARINGS ON RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION

Mr. LEACH. Madam Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. KENNELLY). The gentleman from Iowa has risen to a point of personal privilege, and he has indicated to the Chair the press accounts which give rise to the request for the personal privilege.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] is now recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LEACH. Madam Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege of the House.

In rising to this point of privilege, I wish to express concern about the breakdown of comity that has occurred on a personal and procedural level in the House Banking Committee.

On a personal level, unfortunate adjectives have been used; on a procedural level, unprecedented tactics have been employed.

I don't wish to dwell on the personal, except to stress my high regard for the chairman of the Banking Committee and to suggest that, as the theologian Reinhold Niebuhr once observed, the temper and integrity of the political debate is more important in our kind of democracy than the outcome of any issue.

Motivational aspersions are no substitute for full disclosure; indignation no substitute for pursuit of truth.

Members of the majority may be speaking the truth when they indicate they have no evidence of a link between the failure of an Arkansas S&L and Whitewater and that they know of no improprieties at issue. But it should be understood that not speaking an untruth is not the same as describing a truthful situation, particularly if there has been no serious effort to pursue the truth.

Constitutionally it is the duty of Congress to oversee breaches of law or public ethics in the executive branch. During the 12 years of the so-called divided Government of the Reagan/Bush era, the legislative branch took its constitutionally mandated oversight function seriously, as witnessed by the expansion in the size of its staff and the number of investigations undertaken.

Now both the executive and the legislative branches of Government are controlled by the same political party. The oversight mandate thus falls disproportionately upon the ranking members of the respective committees for those areas of the executive branch over which they have jurisdiction. Not to assume leadership in performing the oversight function with regard to the way in which the financial institutions of this country are managed and regulated would be to violate my oath to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States * * * and * * * well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office."

If the majority party refuses to uphold its responsibilities because of political embarrassment to its party's top elected official, the minority party is left with the choice either of joining in a complicity of silence or pursuing investigations that run the danger of being partisan.

In this context, I would simply emphasize that I raised the Whitewater issue with great reluctance, realizing the import as well as the power of the Presidency. I fully understand the political and personal liabilities involved. Nonetheless, I feel it would be inconsistent, indeed, hypocritical, to my own values, if I refused to pursue a line of inquiry potentially embarrassing to the President of a country which from its inception was intended to be hallmarked by law and its applicability to all citizens. It is, after all, the establishment of a government of laws, not men, that defines the uniqueness of the American experiment with democracy.

Procedurally, it should be noted that the minority is currently engaged in one of the most profound checks and balances philosophical engagements with the executive branch in the modern history of the Congress. This engagement carries far greater implications than any judgment relating to a particular embarrassment of a particular public official at a particular time because at issue is precedent: whether in future circumstances the oversight capacities of Congress can be thwarted if the majority party of Congress is the same as that in control of the executive branch and chooses to refrain from its oversight obligations in order not to embarrass its party's standings.

It is possible that the constitutional precedent for our checks and balances system surrounding the refusal of the administration to cooperate with an oversight probe of the executive branch which the majority party does not sanction may have more long-term negative consequences than any episodic embarrassment that might relate to this or any President's past. What is at issue is the definition of Congress as it applies to the constitutionally granted oversight responsibilities of the legislature. In our checks and balances system, Congress was given oversight responsibilities, but this administration is suggesting in response to minority requests for documentation from executive agencies that only chairmen speak for Congress. The minority in Congress, by this logic, has no power to advance or fulfill its constitutional rights if the majority does not concur in request for information. If such precedent is allowed to stand, Congress's oversight capacities will for all practical purposes be hamstrung whenever the executive and legislative branches of Government are controlled by the same party. Would our Founding Fathers have had this in mind?

In this connection, on December 9, 1993, as ranking member of the Banking Committee, I wrote Federal regulatory agencies to request certain documents of an oversight interest [example, Tab A]. In a followup letter I pointed out, as the courts have noted, "The Congress rarely acts as a body. Its manifold duties in the legislative, investigative, and oversight fields are almost invariably carried out through committees, committee chairmen, individual members, and staff personnel." Murphy v. Department of Army, 613 F.2d 1151, 1156 (1979). In addition, the court stated:

> The Senate and the House are so organized that certain legislative and quasi-legislative activities may be accomplished only through committee action. In other respects, however, the legislature acts through its individual Members. All Members have a constitutionally recognized status entitling them to share in general congressional powers and responsibilities, many of them requiring access to executive information. It would be an inappropriate intrusion into the legislative sphere for the courts to decide without congressional direction that, for example, only the chairman of a committee shall be regarded as the official voice of the Congress for purposes of receiving such information, as distinguished from its ranking minority member, or other committee members, or other members of Congress. Each of them participates in the law-making process; each has a voice and a vote in that process; and each is entitled to request such information from the executive agencies as will enable him to carry out the responsibilities of a legislator.

Agency heads responded that a ranking member only has the authority of an individual Member of Congress and, therefore, may only obtain information that would be available to the public pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act. In addition, the Office of Thrift Supervision asserted that it differs "with the view that Rules X and XI of the House of Representatives grant to a ranking minority member—or any individual member—the same authority to request information that a committee chairman possesses." In short, the agencies contend that only chairmen, not ranking members, speak for Congress.

Subsequently, on March 8, 1994, I wrote requesting information for the Banking Committee's upcoming RTC oversight hearing [Tab B]. Agency heads again responded by holding to the position that only the chairman of a committee would be permitted access to agency documents.

In this dispute about who is entitled to speak for Congress in the context of Congress' right and obligation under Article I of the Constitution to conduct oversight of the executive branch, the chairman of the Banking Committee, in what may have been an effort to bolster the executive's position, wrote agency heads on March 10, 1994, to suggest that they deny my document request and wrote separately on March 14, 1994, to state that they need not answer questions concerning Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan at the scheduled hearings [Tabs C and D]. The chairman's letter contained an implicit and unprecedented philosophical assertion that not only does a chairman have the exclusive right to obtain oversight documents from the executive branch, but the right to deny such documentation to other Members and the right even to deny inquiries about issues clearly germane to the subject of hearings.

So that there is no misunderstanding, the RTC oversight hearing was scheduled under requirement of law, section 21A(k)(6) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. §1441a(k)(6)), and there is no provision in that law for exceptions to congressional oversight that relate to a single State and its institutions. The U.S. Congress wrote a law applicable to all 50 States, not 49, and the oversight of our laws applies throughout this country. Just as in America no individual is above the law, no State is beyond its reach. Just as no individual is entitled to violate the law out of ignorance of it, no person, even the chairman of a congressional committee, is entitled after the fact to be sole interpreter of a law's meaning or serve as a censor to another Member's inquiries. Indeed, no Member of Congress has the right or power to deny relevant information to another Member.

In addition to the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the committee's role in oversight is buttressed by the House rules as modified under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970. I refer to paragraph 2 of House Rule X providing for the committee's "General Oversight Responsibilities" which states:

> (b)(1) Each standing committee . . . shall review and study, on a continuing basis, the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of that committee and the organization and operation of the Federal agencies and entities having responsibilities in or for the administration and execution thereof, in order to determine whether such laws and the programs thereunder are being implemented and carried out in accordance with the intent of the congress and whether such programs should be continued, curtailed, or eliminated.

Separate procedural rules may apply to an investigative hearing, but such rules do not apply in this case. The statutorily mandated RTC hearing is an oversight hearing in accordance with rule X. Any reliance on investigative hearing procedures to deny information to committee members is misplaced. Any information requests or questions by Members related in any manner to RTC operations are authorized under the committee's oversight authority. It is also expected that in answering questions witnesses have the obligation either to assert appropriate privileges or fully respond with answers to the questions (See, 2 U.S.C. §192, Sinclair v. United States, 279 U.S. 263 (1929)) and such answers shall be truthful. (See, 18 U.S.C. §1001, U.S. v. Poindexter, 951 F.2d 369 (D.C. Cir. 1991)).

Moreover, the precedent of the Banking Committee is clear with respect to the relevance of specific questions on specific institutions. On numerous occasions at past RTC oversight hearings, questions related to individual institutions have been asked by committee members, including the chairman, and answered by witnesses. In fact, the committee's invitation letter of March 3, 1994, to Treasury Secretary Bentsen for purposes of the RTC oversight hearing, seeks testimony and documents related to a specific institution, Homefed Savings. Of relevance also is the following statement last week of the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee:

> So we have had now over the years since 1989, a very long series of regular oversight hearings where we call in the officials responsible for implementing that law to find out exactly how it is working and if there is a need to change any particular part of it. Is it working the way it was designed to work? Have we corrected all the abuses? We were so concerned about that issue that, in fact, we built into that 1989 law a requirement that there has to be a hearing here in Congress every 6 months on how that cleanup effort is doing and how that law is being implemented. Within the text of that part of the law we went so far as to say that any institutions that failed in that time period, in the mid-1980's, that if any Senator on the committee wanted to come in and ask questions about that particular institution, that they had a right in law to do so. We did not foresee the Madison case at that time, but it applies precisely to the Madison case and every other case out of that time period. (CONG. REC. S3153, March 17, 1994).

To the degree the chairman's letters are open to an interpretation that would imply the possibility that they have been requested by the administration to bolster its efforts to deny information to the Congress and thereby the public, at issue would be a collusive effort by the majority party in the Congress to aid and abet the executive branch in its concerted effort to deny disclosure of information related to legitimate congressional oversight.

In this regard, a letter recently copied to Representative WILLIAM CLINGER, ranking member of the Government Operations Committee, evidences a comparable approach in another committee of Congress [Tab E].

It is the minority's position that executive branch witnesses must address their obligations to respond to legitimate oversight requests and legitimate inquiries on the subject of hearings as required by the law and the Constitution, not in conjunction with any arbitrary desire of a chairman to deny discussion on a subject the executive branch would rather not forthcomingly address. The minority party, has a baseline assumption that officials of the U.S. Government will comply with the law and, when appearing before a committee of Congress, abide by the Code of Government Ethics for Federal employees to "Uphold the Constitution, laws, and regulations of the United States and all governments therein and never be party to their evasion." [Public Law No. 96-303, July 3, 1980, 94 Stat. 855].

The constitutionally-derived obligation of oversight cannot be short-circuited at the whim of the congressional majority. It is just as much the duty of the minority party, as the majority. Indeed, in real life circumstance as evidenced in this particular incident, oversight may in practice imply a greater obligation on the party out of power than the party in control of the executive branch.

Hodding Carter, the distinguished journalist from Mississippi, recently noted that southerners of virtually all philosophical stripes recognized a little or a lot of truth in certain northern concerns about discrimination that existed in the South in the heyday of civil rights activism. But with understandable resentment all felt that northerners had a duty to look a little more assiduously in their own backyards. In this probe of Whitewater, I believe an outsider might conclude that the single party concentration of political power in Arkansas may be in need of review that the shadow of Lyndon Johnson and Huey Long may have been cast too greatly on a former governorship. But as a northerner, I am obligated to note that my primary responsibility is my backyard, in this case the body to which I am elected to serve. While I believe it would be unfair to suggest that one of America's great political parties is more honest than the other, I believe the concerted effort to avoid accountability and full disclosure in the Whitewater incident, and the unfortunate institutional precedents in process of being established, reflect attitudes more associated with single party governance of closed than open societies. Competition is the American way. When single party dominance is long and deep, arrogance associated with power creeps incontestably into the system. Whitewater, in the end, may tell more about Congress than the executive branch.

In this context, the minority raised concerns about the manner in which the RTC oversight hearing scheduled this week might have been conducted. Nevertheless, the minority was disappointed the hearing was abruptly postponed.

Postponement of the hearing by the majority raises, above anything else, the issue of compliance with the law. Compliance with the law is not a matter of convenience or discretion. The majority party has no prerogative to avoid capriciously its legal obligations.

Hearings mandated by statute were to have occurred by December 3, 1993. It is a statutory obligation of the majority in the legislative branch to conduct on a timely basis RTC oversight;

it is the statutory obligation of the executive to cooperate with Congress and comply with its legal responsibilities.

The negotiations this week between leaders of the House which led to the passage of a bipartisan resolution expressing the sense of the House as to the need to hold bipartisan hearings are promising. The subsequent statements by the Speaker that these discussions were of the "possibility of hearings, not a concession that hearings are not necessarily going to take place," is disappointing. The majority that an obligation to ensure the decision to postpone indefinitely RTC hearings does not amount to yet another example of Congress not applying the law to itself.

With regard to a possible hearing, let me stress the minority has offered to cooperate fully with the special counsel. We have transferred substantial information to his office. We have given him our proposed witness list and offered to support a delay in the day of hearings provided under House rules to the minority to allow him a chance to depose witnesses first. For his part, the special counsel, in a meeting on March 17, 1994, with the minority, said that he would not impede in any manner executive branch testimony and that he would not stand in the way of an RTC oversight hearing. Mr. Fiske also stated that he did not object to the disclosure of copies of documents to Congress, other than White House documents. The existence of a special counsel appointed in the Madison case cannot be used as a rationale to avoid providing RTC oversight information to Congress.

Congress and prosecuting attorneys have differentiated roles, but they are by no means incompatible. In fact, they are generally complementary. Indeed, in the Banking Committee hearings over the past decade on institutions such as Lincoln—Charles Keating, and Silverado—Neil Bush, the Justice Department had tandem investigations underway. Hearings almost always reveal knowledge and perspective that is helpful to prosecutors. It was, after all, Senator Ervin's committee that revealed the existence of the Watergate tapes and it was the recent Senate hearing that revealed improper contacts between executive branch agencies and the White House. The major recent exception where a prosecutor was undercut by Congress involved excessive zeal to embarrass Presidents Reagan and Bush that caused a committee to offer immunity to certain witnesses in the Iran Contra people. But the more general proposition is that constraining a congressional inquiry has the effect of reducing knowledge, thus reducing prosecutorial discretion.

Mr. Speaker, in a country in which process is our most important product, it is the belief of this Member that the precedents established in this investigation are more important than the investigation itself. Nevertheless, I come to the floor this afternoon to present to the attention of the House and the American people some findings, with supporting documentation, the Minority has uncovered in its ongoing investigation of the Whitewater/Madison affair.

Accordingly, I would like to review in both a perspective and information dispensing sense the Madison/Whitewater issue and divide the remainder of my discussion in two categories: what happened and how the administration has responded.

On the landscape of political scandals Whitewater may be a bump, but it speaks mountains about me-generation public ethics as well as single party control of certain States and the U.S. Congress.

In a nutshell, Whitewater is about the arrogance of power—Machiavellian machinations of single-party Government. It all began in the late 1970's when a budding S&L owner named James McDougal formed a 50–50 real estate venture with a young politician, the then Attorney General of Arkansas, Bill Clinton. In this venture called Whitewater, the S&L owner and S&L affiliated entities provided virtually all, perhaps, all, the money; the Governor-in-the-making provided his name.

Over the years, the company received infusions of cash from the S&L as well as from a small business investment corporation which diverted, allegedly at the Governor's request, federally-guaranteed funds from a program designed for socially and economically disadvantaged people to the Governor's partners and thence, in part, to Whitewater.

Some of these funds were used to pay off personal and campaign liabilities of the Governor; some to purchase a tract of land from a company to which the State had just given a significant tax break. Whitewater records have apparently been largely lost. A review of the numerous land transactions, however, raises questions of what happened to the money that came into the company and a review of the President's tax records raises questions about tax deductions that were taken and income that may not have been declared.

Under the governorship of Bill Clinton, Jim McDougal was named a Gubernatorial aide to serve principally liaison to the Economic Development, Commerce, and Highway and Transportation Departments; the first lady of Arkansas was hired to represent the S&L before State regulators; the president of the S&L was placed on the State S&L commission; an attorney who represented the S&L was named the State S&L regulator; the S&L received rent from State agencies; Whitewater had roads constructed using a State agency program and State funds; and the S&L was allowed to operate, despite being insolvent for an extended period, providing millions in loans and investment dollars to insiders and the Arkansas political establishment.

Under the governorship of Bill Clinton, the S&L was allowed to grow 25-fold until Federal regulators forced its closing, at which time taxpayers picked up the tab for losses that amounted to approximately 50 percent of the institutions's deposit base.

Under the governorship of Bill Clinton, the total number of State-chartered savings associations declined dramatically. Over the period December 1979 to December 1992, the number of stock State-chartered thrifts in Arkansas declined from the 33, with assets of $961,002,000 to 3, with assets of $146,072,000. Viewed another way, the amount of assets available to support home mortgage lending for the people of Arkansas declined.

The story of Whitewater is thus part and parcel the story of the greatest domestic policy mistake of the century—the quarter-trillion dollar S&L debacle. It is the story of a company which in one sense was a simple real estate development venture, but in another was a vehicle used to spirit federally insured deposits from an S&L and compromise a significant political figure.

In the largest series of bank robberies in history, which precipitated an industry bail out larger than the taxpayers provided Lockheed, Chrysler, and New York City times a factor of 10, it is fair to ask: "What happened? Who is responsible."

An answer to these inquiries requires an understanding that those accountable are not only a few negligent and corrupt S&L owners, but attorneys, accountants, State and Federal legislators, regulator and assorted public officials. As wide ranging as the responsibility is, however, it is a mistake to be so glassy eyed as not seek lessons for the future through a demand for individual accountability for breaches of law and ethics in the past.

Macroeconomics aside, public responsibility for the S&L debacle is of a tripod nature, involving: First, the conflict-ridden role of Congress in passing loose laws; second, the ideological mistake of the Reagan administration in urging deregulation in an industry which requires responsible standards; and third, the culpability of a small number of State governments, such as in California, Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas, which failed to rein in high flying State-chartered, State-regulated institutions, which because of the Federal nature of deposit insurance, precipitated a massive transfer of wealth from States with responsible governments to those without.

In Arkansas it is impressive how the Federal Government was obligated to close more than 80 percent of State-chartered S&L's in the 1980's and how large taxpayer losses were in relation to the State's S&L deposit base. The failure of the Clinton administration in Little Rock to fulfill its responsibility to police State financial institutions had the effect of increasing tax burdens on citizens of Arkansas as well as other States.

While taxpayers at the national level were forced to pick up the tab for the mistakes of politicians in whose elections they could not vote, citizens in States like Arkansas were doubly shortchanged. Not only did they have to share in eventual bail out costs, but when their home-based financial institutions frittered away the hard earned deposit savings of the their State to insiders, fewer resources were made available to potential homeowners and minority entrepreneurs.

What the Keating-5 scandal was all about was the attempt of an S&L owner to compromise through political contributions significant political players, in this case five Senators, to influence regulators to keep an insolvent, corruptly run, institution from being closed. What makes Governor Clinton's involvement with a company which helped breach the vaults of an Arkansas S&L philosophically at least equal to, but in reality more troubling than the Keating model is that not only did the institution's management organize conflict-ridden fund-raising endeavors for the key politician in the State, but through Whitewater it put the Governor in a compromising personal finance position as well.

What is extraordinary is the hypocrisy of the circumstance. The following 1991 announcement statement of Governor Clinton speaks for itself:

> For 12 years of this Reagan-Bush era, the Republicans have let S&L crooks and self-serving CEO's try to build an economy out of paper and perks instead of people and products. They stack the deck in favor of their friends at the top and tell everybody else to wait for whatever trickles down.

Despite the rhetoric it is remarkable how time after time in the 1980's, alleged defenders of the little guy in American politics found themselves advancing the interests of a small number of owners of financial institutions which were run as private piggy banks for insiders. The intertwining of greed and ambition turned democratic values upside down.

In our kind of democracy ends simply don't justify means. Just as a conservative, who may despise government, has no ethical right not to pay taxes, a liberal has no ethical basis to put the public's money in his own or his campaign's pocket just because he may have the arrogance to believe he is advancing a political creed that is in the public's interest.

Why does all this matter?

Here, it would perhaps be appropriate to paraphrase the great Illinois Senator, Ev Dirksen: a few thousand here and a few thousand there and pretty soon it adds up to a real scandal. Put another way, an ethical lapse here and an ethical lapse there and pretty soon it adds up to a character deficit.

I have never known anyone in public life better able to put embarrassing episodes behind him than Bill Clinton. Accordingly, I couldn't have been more surprised by the discombobulation of the administration at the minority's restrained request last November for hearings and full disclosure.

As in most serious public scandals, coverups can prove as troubling as acts at their source.

Much press attention has centered in recent weeks on the revelations of improper contact between employees of independent Federal agencies and the White House. The question of whether a heads up was appropriate is of significance. More so, is whether the line between a heads up and coverup was crossed.

By background, for several years a group of criminal investigators for the RTC in Kansas City reviewed the failure of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan in Little Rock and came to the conclusion criminal referrals were appropriate. In the last week of September 1993, they sent copies of their referrals to Washington. Within a few days of receipt of the referrals from the Kansas City office, RTC Washington officials visited the White House. Within a few weeks, in an unprecedented change of procedure, Washington demanded to review all Madison referrals. Within a few months, a senior Kansas City criminal investigator was removed from the case. Within a few more months, officials from RTC Washington visited Kansas City to pass on the determined message that senior RTC officials in Washington wanted it understood that they wished to claim Whitewater was not responsible for any losses at Madison.

Courageously, Kansas City investigators refused to allow Washington RTC objections to change the content of the referrals they sent in the second week of October 1993, to the Justice Department.

Courageously, Kansas City investigators refused to back the Washington position that Madison's losses were unrelated to Whitewater and pointed out to their superiors that in one intensely reviewed 6-month period alone approximately $70,000 was transferred from Madison and Madison affiliated companies to Whitewater.

Courageously, Kansas City investigators have sought whistleblower protection rather than comply with the Washington RTC gag order that no one from Kansas City could speak with Special Counsel Fiske without clearance through and accompaniment of Washington RTC officials.

The briefing of the White House by high ranking Department of Treasury and RTC employees must be understood in the context of the development and transmittal to the Justice Department of these referrals and in the context of the possibility Kansas City was in the process of developing further referrals.

There are many elements of the Whitewater affair that are a bit esoteric. But the revelations that U.S. Government officials briefed key White House aides on potential legal actions which independent regulatory agencies might be obligated to take implicating but not charging the President and First Lady subvert one of the fundamental premises of American democracy—that this is a country of laws and not men.

In America no individual, whatever his or her rank, is privileged in the eyes of the law. No public official has the right to influence possible legal actions against him or herself. For this reason agencies of the Government as well as the White House have precise rules that govern their employees.

The following standards—31 CFR §0.735-30—apply to the Department of Treasury:

> An employee should avoid any action . . . which might result in, or create the appearance of . .
>
> (2) Giving preferential treatment to any person; . . .
>
> (4) Losing complete independence or impartiality;
>
> (5) Making a Government decision outside official channels; or
>

Similarly, the following standards contained in 12 CFR §1605.7 apply to RTC employees:

> No employees shall engage in any action, which might result in, or create the appearance of . .
>
> (b) giving preferential treatment to any person; . . .
>
> (d) losing complete independence or impartiality;
>
> (e) making an RTC decision outside official channels; or,
>
> (f) adversely affecting the public's confidence in the integrity of the RTC.

Likewise, the following standards apply to the White House—3 CFR §100.735-4:

> In all circumstances employees shall conduct themselves so as to exemplify the highest standards of integrity. An employee shall avoid any action, whether or not specifically prohibited by this subpart, which might result in, or create the appearance of:
>
> (1) Using public office for private gain;
>
> (2) Giving preferential treatment to any person; . . .
>
> (4) Losing complete independence or impartiality;
>
> (5) Making a Government decision outside official channels; or
>
> (6) Affecting adversely the confidence of the public in the integrity of the Government.

Perhaps laws have not been broken, but seldom have the public and private ethics of professionals in the White House and executive departments and branch agencies been so thoroughly devalued.

The point of all this is that there is a disjunction in this administration between public policy and private ethics. Americans abhor privilege; hypocrisy gnaws at the American soul; it leaves a dispiriting residue of resentment.

What is also extraordinary is the absence of simple truth.

Administration claim: Whitewater caused no losses to Madison.

Fact: As reflected in the minority-developed charts and evidenced by supporting documentation, Madison and affiliated companies transferred significant resources to Whitewater. In addition to being a modest-sized real estate company, with a cash flow derived from land sales, Whitewater appears to be one of a dozen so companies with direct or indirect access to Madison and its taxpayer guaranteed deposits.

Administration claim: The Clintons lost money in Whitewater.

Fact: To have lost in Whitewater implies that the Clintons invested sums which were unrecovered. Their Whitewater partner, James McDougal, claims at most the Clintons over the years put in $13,500 in Whitewater. The minority has provided evidence that one land transaction alone returned more than this amount to the Clintons and published reports indicate tax deductions of some value were taken. The Lyons report, as well as a review of land sales, indicates substantial sums were taken out of Whitewater over the years. It is not clear how disbursements were arranged. What is clear is that infusions of capital from land sales, from Madison-affiliated entities and possibly from others appear to have covered loans the company and the Clintons took out. The company may have had a negative value when the Clintons sold their half interest in 1992, but that neither means the Clintons themselves lost money, nor that questions ought not be asked about how direct or contingent liabilities may have been disposed of as late as 1992.

Administration claim: The President and his staff would fully cooperate with Congress.

Fact: The executive branch is actively working to prevent full disclosure of documents and committee access to witnesses.

Administration claim: It has done nothing wrong in relation to the RTC investigation into the failure of Madison and is fully cooperating with Special Counsel Fiske's probe.

Fact: Officials of an independent regulatory agency—the RTC—immediately notified the White House of the probe of Madison by its Kansas City office and attempted to put in place procedural techniques to undercut the traditional independence of its regional offices.

Fact: In January 1994, RTC Washington met with Kansas City staff. After the meeting the Kansas City office filed a formal complaint with Washington RTC.

Fact: On February 2, 1994, the day Roger Altman briefed the White House on Madison Guaranty, RTC senior attorney, April Breslaw visited the Kansas City office and said that Washington would like to say that Whitewater caused no losses to Madison. Kansas City employees protested that this was not the case.

Fact: On September 29, 1993, before the new criminal referrals were sent to the Justice Department, Treasury General Counsel Jean Hanson briefed White House Counsel on them. Nine days after the meeting, the referrals were sent to the Justice Department. On October 14, Jean Hanson with Secretary Bentsen's press secretary and chief of staff met with Presidential advisors ostensibly to discuss press inquiries related to Madison Guaranty.

Fact: On February 2, right after the appointment of Special Counsel Robert Fiske, Roger Altman gave the White House a heads-up briefing on Madison. At the Senate oversight board hearing, Roger Altman revealed his February 2 meeting, but no others. Several days later, the September and October White House briefings were revealed. On March 9, the Washington Post reported that there were numerous other contacts between the Treasury and the White House on Madison. After subpoenas are issued it is revealed that there are over 3,500 pages of documentation surrounding these contacts which the White House terms as inconsequential.

Fact: After the appointment of Special Counsel Fiske, Washington RTC officials imposed censorship guidelines on Kansas City RTC employees. No discussion with Fiske could be made without going through Washington. No meetings between Kansas City office and Fiske could take place without accompaniment of Washington officials. No materials could be forwarded without going through Washington. All information concerning attorney-client privilege was to be redacted, with Washington RTC determining the scope.

Administration claim: No fundraising improprieties occurred.

Fact: On April 4, 1985, Jim McDougal hosted a fundraiser for Governor Clinton. The Clinton's repeatedly asked McDougal to host the fundraiser to pay off the $50,000 personal loan that Clinton had taken out in the final weeks of his 1984 campaign. The question at issue is whether some of the money appears to have been diverted from Madison Guaranty, which would then, with the failure of Madison, imply deferred Federal financing of a gubernatorial election. For example, one cashier's check for $3,000 was made in the name of Charles Peacock III, then a 24-year-old college student who disclaims any knowledge of having made a contribution. Mr. Peacock's father was a major Madison borrower and served at one time on Madison's board. Other checks that the RTC is reviewing include a $3,000 check from the late Dean Landrum, an employee of Charles Peacock, and one from Susan McDougal. In the former Governor's defense, candidates are not always in a position to verify their campaign contributions.

Mr. Speaker, the President's former partner, Jim McDougal, in a number of occasions has contested the assertion that no resources were taken from Madison Guaranty and its related entities and given to Whitewater. In an AP story on February 4, 1994, and on the "David Brinkley Show" on March 13, 1994, he specifically raised concerns that Madison Marketing was not owned by Madison Guaranty, but was instead a sole proprietorship owned by his former wife. He has cited documents filed with the Arkansas secretary of state's office to buttress his claim.

Mr. McDougal apparently believes there are subtleties about the nature of Madison Marketing that need clarification. Mr. McDougal gives great credence to the circumstance that at some point Madison Marketing may have been operating as an intended proprietorship of his wife, but, whether this is true, this appears to be a distinction without a difference, form over substance. The overwhelming perspective as contained in the 1986 Federal Home Loan Bank Board Report of Examination is that all Madison Marketing resources were derived from Madison Guaranty or its subsidiaries. Any money transferred to Whitewater from Madison Marketing would thus have had as its source the S&L. The 1986 FHLBB exam, upon which the earlier staff memo on this subject was based, states:

> A. Objectionable Conflicts of Interest: Conflicts of interest involving James McDougal, Susan McDougal, and William Henley have been detrimental to the safety and soundness of the Institution. These individuals are in control of the Institution (Madison Guaranty) through their stock ownership. James McDougal owns 63.5 percent of the outstanding Madison shares. His wife, Susan McDougal, owns 12.6 percent, and her brother, William Henley owns 8.5 percent. In addition to his ownership control, Mr. McDougal, as President of the Institution's subsidiary (Madison Financial), has complete control of the land development projects discussed in comment.
> B. This control enabled Mr. McDougal to structure the development and financing of the projects so that substantial cash payments could be diverted to himself, Susan McDougal, William Henley and others. These payments have directly benefited these individuals, but Madison Guaranty has received little or nothing in return. Though they have been structured to avoid specific Insurance Regulations, these payments are contrary to the general policy of the FHLBB concerning conflicts of interest as stated in Insurance Regulation 571.9 and FHLBB Memorandum R-19a.

> Many of these payments have been funneled through business entities which are owned or controlled by the McDougals, employees, relatives of employees, or close friends of the McDougals and Henley.
>
> Madison Marketing: Madison Marketing is paid for doing all the general advertising for Madison Guaranty and most of the advertising for Madison Financial's land development projects. All of Madison Marketing's business is derived from Madison Guaranty or its subsidiaries. Since 1983 these payments total $1,532,000.
>
> Given the evidence of Madison Marketing's invoices, it is questionable how much of these advertising services are actually performed by the firm. The actual work of advertising, such as the design and production of commercials and providing air time or newspaper space, appears to be performed by others. Madison Marketing apparently just pays the bills of other providers and adds a 15 percent fee of its own. Examiners estimated this fee to be approximately $200,000 since 1983. It would appear that Madison Guaranty could have an employee perform similar work for much less money.
> Mr. Latham stated that Madison Marketing made no payments to any stockholders. This statement is false. As a part of a test for such payments, the examiners discovered two remittances from Madison Marketing to Susan McDougal which total $50,000. This was a test, and there may be additional payments.

Mr. McDougal apparently believes Madison Marketing should be understood simply as a sole proprietorship of his wife with no ties to the S&L. This view is in discordance with that of the U.S. Government, as indicated by the FHLBB report cited above; it is also in discordance with a contemporaneous view of the legal situation as defined and described by Mr. McDougal in a July 1, 1986, memorandum from him to Madison guaranty's president, Mr. John Latham. In this memorandum, which is a copy of an original Madison document in the possession of the RTC and the minority of the House Banking Committee, Mr. McDougal asserts:

> In late January 1985, Mrs. McDougal permitted Madison Marketing to become a subsidiary of Madison Financial Corporation.

In addition, Mr. Jeff Gerth of the New York Times has reported on March 8, 1992, an earlier instance in which Madison Marketing transferred resources to Whitewater. Mr. Gerth reported:

> Whitewater's check ledger shows that Whitewater's account at Madison was overdrawn in 1984, when the corporation was making payments on the Clinton's loan. Money was deposited to make up the shortage from Madison Marketing, an affiliate of the savings and loan that derived its revenues from the institution, records also show.

In addition, David Hale and his attorney Randy Coleman have asserted in recent days that it was proceeds of an $825,000 Madison loan that was used to leverage SBA funds and to make the $300,000 loan to Susan McDougal, of which $110,000 was deposited to Whitewater.

This evidentiary material coupled with the April 17, 1985, minutes of Madison Financial's board authorizing a transfer of $30,000 from Madison Financial to Whitewater, the memo of L. Jean Lewis of the Kansas City RTC office showing over a 6-month period reviewed that approximately $70,000 was transferred from Madison or affiliated entities to Whitewater, plus other more confidential RTC material in our possession indicates there is every credible reason to believe that Madison Guaranty through affiliated entities did transfer money to Whitewater.

Furthermore, records filed with the Arkansas Secretary of State's office show that Mr. McDougal, as president of Madison Financial Corp.—a subsidiary of Madison Guaranty—on July 26, 1986, filed an application for registration of fictitious name. The application was for Madison Financial to do business as Madison Marketing. This document does not represent incorporation papers. This application appears to be in response to the 1986 Federal Home Loan Bank exam which noted that with regard to Madison Marketing and Madison Real Estate, Madison Financial had not registered as a "doing business as" in the county records.

The effect of this statement with its supporting documentation is to evidence that:

First, Whitewater may have begun as a legitimate real estate venture but it came to be used to skim, directly or indirectly, federally insured deposits from an S&L and a Small Business Investment Corporation. When each failed, the U.S. taxpayer became obligated to pick up the tab;

Second, the family of the former Governor of Arkansas received value from Whitewater in excess of resources invested;

Third, taxpayer guaranteed funds were in all likelihood used to benefit the campaign of a former Governor;

Fourth, the independence of the U.S. Government's regulatory system has been flagrantly violated in an effort to protect a single American citizen; and Fifth, Congress and the Executive are employing closed society techniques to resist full disclosure of an embarrassing circumstance, with unfortunate precedent setting ramifications.

Last month a BBC reporter asked me if we Americans weren't making too much of this scandal. He raised a fair question. Compared with petty potentates around the world, who routinely walk off with millions and in some cases billions, conflicts of interest in American politics are of petty variety. In this case, however, we have a situation where a multithousand-dollar conflicts of interest led to a multimillion-dollar hit on the taxpayer. That is the meaning to the failure of Madison Guaranty. That is also the meaning of the Small Business Investment Corporation called Capitol.

It is simply not appropriate to shrug it off and say that this is the way things are done in small States. They aren't in Nebraska, South Dakota, or Iowa. It is simply not appropriate to say it isn't a Federal issue. It is. The U.S. taxpayer has lost millions; homeowners in Arkansas have lost institutions that were established to serve their needs; minorities throughout the country cannot lightly shrug off yet another instance in which a program designed to give them a crack at the American dream was redirected to serve the investment ego a State political establishment.

It is suggested by the majority that we have better things to do around here. There again is some truth to this. The minority also wants to get on with the business of health care, welfare reform, crime legislation. Indeed, we pledge to be constructive and are not blocking any congressional consideration of these issues. But, in a larger sense, it should be understood that these—we have better things to do—laments suggest that ethics, governmental integrity, and the possible misuse of the public's money should be secondary considerations—something to worry about only when we have time. In a democratic system, built and maintained on the confidence of the people, placing such considerations last on the list of priorities is a highly dubious game. Nothing works over the long haul if the public loses confidence in its governmental institutions and the people who operate those institutions. The task of keeping the people's confidence may not be pretty or pleasant, but it is a first priority in our system—not a last priority as all too many are suggesting today.

Whitewater is less about the issues of the day than it is the ethics of our time. It is a central issue not because it is big, but precisely because it is small.

The way we in America keep our scandals from becoming too big is by holding people accountable when the amounts of money at issue are relatively small. It is the principles at issue, not the dollar amounts that matter.

In conclusion, let me stress that the most difficult issue to deal with is the question of proportionality. When the minority made its restrained request for hearings last November, I suggested that while there was fire with the smoke, Whitewater appeared to be more a camp than forest fire. I now believe the fire has spread to the grass and is heading to the trees but that it is still not too late to put it out with full disclosure and full accountability. In this regard, I suggested in a December, Washington Post editorial that when breaches of law or public ethics occur, options often exist as to whether civil or criminal remedies are appropriate. I presumptuously concluded then and maintain now that there is no reason not to proceed with civil accountability in a civil way. The last thing this country needs is a year long trial or travail for the President of the United States. It would divide the country and be unfair to the public as well as the President.

Accordingly, I have pledged to the President's counsel as well as to the special counsel that I will do my best to put the issue behind once disclosure is provided. Accountability is in order; a constitutional crisis is not. The Presidency should neither be jeopardized nor debilitated. Rather than high crimes and misdemeanors, the issue today relates to high improprieties and breaches of the public trust.

NOTES FROM THE CONVERSATION BETWEEN RTC SENIOR CRIMINAL INVESTIGATOR L. JEAN LEWIS AND FDIC ATTORNEY APRIL BRESLAW ON FEBRUARY 2, 1994, FROM APPROXIMATELY 3:50 P.M. UNTIL 4:35 P.M.

April stated that "the people at the top" keep getting asked about Whitewater, which seems to have become a catch all phrase for Madison and it's related investigations. She said that eventually "this group" is going to have to make a statement about whether or not Whitewater caused a loss to Madison, but the fact that Whitewater had no loan at Madison provided less potential for a loss. April stated very clearly that Ryan and Kulka (?), the "head people", would like to be able to say that Whitewater did not cause a loss to Madison, but the problem is that so far no one has been able to say that to them. She felt like they wanted to be able to provide an "honest answer", but that there were certain answers that they would be "happier about, because it would get them off the hook."

April felt that it would have been difficult to determine exactly what happened with the Whitewater account, because so many checks had gone in and out of the account, and made a reference to the end resulting netting itself out. She asked about Greg Young's work papers on the Maple Creek Farms reserve for development analysis, and how it didn't seem to have any apparent tie to Whitewater. I concurred that it didn't have any legitimately defined tie, which is precisely why it was included in the referral.

She inquired about the $30,000 check to Jim McDougal from Whitewater in 5/85, and about the disposition of the funds. I explained the transaction as I know it: the $30,000 had been converted to a MGS&L cashier's check, which was subsequently endorsed by and deposited to Riggs National Bank. I explained that when the check was force paid, the Whitewater account was overdrawn by over $28,000 which was then subsequently covered by the payment of a $30,000 bonus from MFC to Jim McDougal, deposited directly to Whitewater on McDougal's orders.

She asked how we could get to a clear cut answer as to whether or not Whitewater caused a loss to Madison. I stated that, as far as I am concerned, there is a clear cut loss. I also stated that any attempt to extract Whitewater as one entity from the rest of the McDougal controlled entities involved in the alleged check kite will distort the entire picture. I further pointed out that I would produce the answers that were available, but that I would not facilitate providing "the people at the top" with the "politically correct answers just to get them off the hook".

She asked questions about the specifics of the checks going through the Whitewater account. I stated that it appeared that the majority of the checks written out of the Whitewater account during the window time frame were going to other financial institutions to make loan payments. I also said that the referral focused only on a short time frame, but that if that same research were conducted for a two year period, it was my belief that the losses to Madison from the Whitewater account alone would easily exceed $100,000, given that $80,000 had gone out of the account during the six month window time frame. I further added that the end loss result from the entire scam, using all 12 companies/entities, would be hundreds of thousands of dollars in what were essentially unauthorized loans.

I stated that if she wanted me to tell her, unequivocally, that Whitewater didn't cause a loss, I could not do that. I could only reiterate the allegations contained in the referral, which are based on fact, and that it is my opinion and belief that Whitewater did, in fact, cause a loss to Madison because of the amount of the unauthorized loans that McDougal made, through the check kite, to entities in which he was a primary party and beneficiary. I also pointed out that this ultimately benefited his business partners—the same business partners that knew they had real estate ventures that were not cash flowing, but that also knew their mortgages and/or notes were somehow being paid. I pointed out that these business partners are intelligent individuals, the majority of them being attorneys, who must have concluded that McDougal was making the payments for their benefit. I posed the question to her, if you know that your mortgages are being paid, but you aren't putting money into the venture, and you also know the venture isn't cash flowing, wouldn't you question the source of the funds being used to your benefit? Would you just assume that your partner was making these multi-thousand dollar payments out of the goodness of his heart? Wouldn't you wonder even more if you knew that your business partner's main source of income, and S&L, was in serious financial difficulty, which by 1985 was fairly common knowledge?

We discussed the initiation of the MGSL investigation, and how evidence of the check kite came to light. I explained that after reviewing a series of checks, all of which noted "loan" in the memo field, I discerned a pattern that looked like a check kite, and proceeded to trace funds through the various accounts, which is a standard investigations procedures. The end result was the referral alleging a massive check kite. I also advised April that I had been told by both the U.S. Attorney's office (Mac Dodson), and the FBI (Steve Irons) that this was a highly prosecutable case of check kiting. I also told her that I disputed the declination of that referral on the basis of "insufficient information". She commented that "that's what Grand Juries are for", and I pointed out that it generally seemed to be the policy of the U.S. Attorney to agree to open a case before they would start Grand Jury proceedings. I also noted that I found the treatment of that particular referral by the Justice Department to be highly unusual. This concluded our discussion.

CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIVE CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS

MARCH 9 TO 23, 1992

Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan ("MGSL") and it's alleged ties to Whitewater Development Corporation ("Whitewater") and Bill & Hillary Clinton were reported in a 3/8/92 New York Times article by Jeff Gerth. MGSL owner and board chairman, James B. McDougal, had been previously tried and acquitted on bank fraud charges in 6/90.

Inquiries regarding these ties emanated from both RTC Investigations in Washington, D.C., and the former Director of the Tulsa Consolidated Office. The Washington inquiry went through the Kansas City Regional Investigations Office to the Tulsa Consolidated Investigations office, who was responsible for investigating failed Arkansas thrifts. The question was raised as to whether Whitewater's relationship with MGSL had been reviewed, and were there any resulting losses or potential criminal activity documented. As a result of this inquiry, the Tulsa office criminal investigator assigned to the Arkansas thrifts was asked to work with the civil investigator in reviewing the completed investigative findings to date. Over a two week period, the criminal investigator reviewed all thrift records obtained from the institution at the time of conservatorship which were stored in the Tulsa office. These records included the available Board Minutes, committee and subsidiary minutes, Fidelity Bond policies, FHLB exams from prior years, outside audits, legal correspondence files and various limited loan files. No mention was found of any Whitewater relationship with MGSL.

MARCH 25 TO APRIL 15, 1992

During this time frame, Tulsa Investigations learned that a former MGSL employee, subsequently (and still) an attorney in the employment of a Little Rock law firm handling extensive litigation in Arkansas for the TRC, had allegedly fabricated at least two years of minutes for an MGSL subsidiary, Madison Financial Corporation ("MFC"). The criminal investigator was asked to review daily records created by the former employee, who was at that time the executive assistant to former MGSL president, John Latham. Latham pled guilty to one charge of bank fraud in 1989. Copies of the former employee's records had been shipped to Tulsa, where it would be determined if further investigation was appropriate. An affirmative decision was reached during the first week of 4/92. While this review was being conducted, the civil investigator was reviewing additional Madison records stored in Little Rock under the control of the post-receivership assuming bank, Central Bank & Trust("CB&T"). These records, which had never been inventoried by either MGSL or CB&T, were stored in a downtown Little Rock warehouse, and included, but were not limited to, former officer correspondence, legal files, subsidiary land development and investment files, microfilm, demand deposit (checking) account records/binders, cancelled checks, etc.

Based on the findings of these concurrent criminal and civil investigative reviews, the decision was made that both investigators should travel to Little Rock for a more extensive review of the warehoused documents. At this point, the criminal investigation, which had been previously scheduled for late 1992, was rescheduled to 4/92.

APRIL 20 TO 24, 1992

The investigators conducted an extensive review of the warehoused records, and the criminal investigator talked with the FBI and U.S. Attorney's office regarding the 1990 trial of former MGSL owner James B. McDougal. The criminal investigator learned that the FBI was previously aware of the fabricated subsidiary minutes and had taken no criminal action. Tulsa Investigations management was advised accordingly and that aspect of the review was suspended.

The warehoused records revealed additional Whitewater checking account statements, raising further questions about the payee's on some of Whitewater's checks. A number of documents belonging to the former Chief Financial Officer of MGSL/MFC were located. Among these documents were several accountant/ledger worksheets on numerous MFC subsidiary land "developments", all of which were heavily subsidized by MGSL. Included in one of the development worksheets marked "Maple Creek Farms" was an item denoting a $30,000 charge to Whitewater for the cost of an engineering survey; this was the first indication of a relationship between MGSL and/or MFC and Whitewater beyond the existence of the Whitewater checking account. Original microfilm, along with pertinent original documents from the warehouse, were sent back to Tulsa for further investigation. Research was conducted on twelve McDougal and/or McDougal business partner controlled accounts, including Whitewater. Check copies were produced for a two year period between 6/84 and 6/86; a standard investigative procedure when tracing the flow of funds.

MAY 1 TO JULY 15, 1992

During the first week of 5/92, all Tulsa Consolidated Office employees were advised that the Tulsa office would be permanently closing at the end of 7/92. All Tulsa Investigations records were shipped to the Kansas City Office, thus putting the Madison investigation on hold. The copy process on the McDougal and/or McDougal business partner controlled accounts was suspended as well, due to equipment and records relocation.

AUGUST 1 TO SEPTEMBER 2, 1992

The criminal investigator transferred to the Kansas City office at the end of 7/92, resuming the analysis of Madison documents and checks. A criminal referral (#C0004) was subsequently generated alleging a $1.5 million check kiting scheme between the McDougal and/or McDougal business partners controlled entities, including Whitewater. This referral was submitted to the FBI and U.S. Attorney, Eastern District of Arkansas on 9/2/92.

SEPTEMBER 3 TO DECEMBER 15, 1992

Having submitted the initial referral on MGSL, the criminal investigator redirected priorities to the ongoing investigations of three other failed thrifts, which were intensifying. First Federal Savings, Paragould, Arkansas, which was reaching suspect plea negotiations, First America Savings, Ft. Smith, Arkansas, which had been referred from jurisdiction in the Western District of Arkansas to the Dallas Fraud Task Force, and Cimmaron Federal Savings, Muskogee, Oklahoma, for which investigations had received an allegation of potential fraud from the managing agent. Throughout these investigations, the criminal investigator continued to request and monitor a response on MSGL referral #C0004.

DECEMBER 15, 1992, TO MARCH 14, 1993

The U.S. Attorney's office did not offer any standard response to the MGSL referral, advising either that a case would be opened or that prosecution would be declined, for three months. In response to numerous calls from the criminal investigator during that time, the Little Rock FBI Special Agent in Charge sent a letter of acknowledgement to the RTC stating that both the FBI and U.S. Attorney had received the referral and exhibits. The investigator continued to work on the aforementioned institutions while continuing to monitor a potential response on the MGSL referral.

MARCH 15 TO MAY 4, 1993

The criminal investigator initiated a preliminary review of criminal activity at Savers Savings, Little Rock, Arkansas, out of which a former borrower had been convicted and sentenced in conjunction with a failed Texas S&L. This review involved extensive interviews with the borrower, and a review of his personal and corporate records prior to his sentencing and incarceration in late 4/93. The investigator continued to make verbal requests for a written response from the FBI or U.S. Attorney on MGSL referral C0004.

MAY 4 TO 25, 1993

On 5/4/93, the criminal investigator sent a letter to the U.S. Attorney inquiring about the status of the referral. The response from the U.S. Attorney referred the investigator to the U.S. Justice Department in Washington D.C. The criminal investigator initiated a series of calls to DOJ/Washington to ascertain the status of the referral. Simultaneously, the criminal investigator, criminal investigations department head and the field investigations officer determined that the most expedient way to complete the investigation of previously defined criminal allegations at MGSL was to supplement the investigative manpower.

MAY 31 TO JUNE 4, 1993

Three additional criminal investigators were assigned the task of reviewing loan transactions, checking accounts and subsidiary lending transactions to ascertain the level of criminal activity at both MGSL and MFC. The lead investigator, along with another task assigned investigator, returned to the Little Rock warehouse for further document review. The investigators additionally travelled to four other counties to review land records pertaining to property sales, loan and mortgages reflected in the County Clerk's offices. Those findings were shared with the other assigned investigators.

JUNE 5 TO OCTOBER 8, 1993

The four investigators reviewed and analyzed all available MGSL transactional information for the ensuing 120 days. As a result, nine additional criminal referrals involving multiple MGSL and MFC transactions were generated and submitted to the U.S. Attorney and FBI on 10/8/93.

OCTOBER 17, 1993

The lead criminal investigator received a letter from the new U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Arkansas, Paula J. Casey. The letter stated that referral #C0004, submitted 9/2/92, had been declined due to "insufficient information".

NOVEMBER 1, 1993 TO JANUARY 24, 1994

RTC Criminal investigations continues to support the investigative efforts of the FBI and U.S. Attorney by providing MGSL and MFC documents warehoused in Kansas City, and offering assistance with ongoing subpoena compliance.

The responsibility for investigation of all failed Arkansas thrifts was assumed by the Tulsa RTC Office of Investigations during the first quarter of 1991. Responsibility was assumed from the Eagan/Minneapolis RTC Office of Investigations; the lead Eagan investigator for Madison Guaranty Savings, Little Rock, Arkansas at that time was Mike Hammerly.

When the Tulsa office assumed this responsibility, Madison Guaranty was assigned to civil Investigator Wyatt Adams. Shortly after the reassignment of the Arkansas thrifts, several members of the Tulsa Office of Investigations made a sweep through the failed Arkansas shops and appropriated all the records deemed necessary for the effective completion of both civil and criminal investigations.

In mid summer 1991, Investigator Wyatt Adams traveled to Little Rock to review Madison Guaranty records held by the acquiring entity, Central Bank and Trust, in an old, non-climate controlled building downtown on the river, which had been converted to a "records storage" facility. According to Adams, when he arrived there were extensive records in poor condition, haphazardly heaped into the storage space on the second floor, which was poorly lit and protected by a chain link fence and a padlock. Boxes were on their sides with records dumped out, DDA binders were poorly stacked in one corner, and multiple boxes had been shoved into shelving, with no identifiable inventory. It should be noted that these records were already in the warehouse at the time of the Investigations team Spring 1991 "sweep" through the Arkansas thrifts, and that the former Managing Agent concurs that, to his knowledge, there was no inventory of these records.

In July 1991, the criminal investigation of Madison Guaranty was assigned to Investigator Jean Lewis. A follow-up criminal investigation was tentatively slated to begin during the third quarter of 1992, due to the fact that former thrift owner James B. McDougal had previously been tried on Bank Fraud charges stemming from Madison Guaranty, and was acquitted in 1990. The follow-up investigation was intended to ensure that any remaining potential criminal matters had been properly reviewed and addressed.

In March 1992, Senior Investigator Specialist Jon Walker contacted the Kansas City regional RTC office regarding an article that has appeared in the New York Times stating possible ties between Whitewater Development, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, and Bill & Hillary Clinton. Personnel in the KC regional office then contacted the Tulsa office with a request that this issue be reviewed to determine if Investigations was aware of, had reviewed and/or appropriately addressed matters pertaining to the possible relationship between Whitewater Development and Madison Guaranty.

After a review of all available Tulsa Investigations inventory documents, Investigators Adams and Lewis were detailed to the warehouse in Little Rock to review the remaining Madison records and ensure that nothing had been overlooked with regard to any potential action on this matter. Investigator Lewis noted, with concurrence from Adams, that upon arrival that the records were in very poor condition, appeared to have been dumped and/or crammed into the warehouse space, and that there was no available inventory provided by Central Bank & Trust personnel which could identify the nature of these records. Investigator Adams noted that this was the same condition in which he'd found the records in 1991. Boxes had to be rearranged in order to establish work space and room for a table and two chairs.

During the review of these records, neither Investigator Adams or Lewis located any loan files and loan records relating specifically to Whitewater Development or the Clintons. Investigator Adams then went through a number of Demand Deposit Account binders, to ascertain if Whitewater had maintained a checking account at Madison Guaranty. He located an account and statements for 1984, 1985 and 1986. Investigator Lewis reviewed multiple boxes of records, and recovered several documents from former thrift officer files that warranted further review. Among those documents was a ledger sheet marked "Reserve for Development—Maple Creek Farms" from the records of former Madison CFO Greg Young. On that ledger sheet was noted a $30,000 development reserve cost for an engineering survey charged to Whitewater Development. There was also a limited amount of microfilm located at the warehouse, which was appropriated under the terms of the P&A Agreement and returned to Tulsa along with several DDA binders, with permission from Central Bank & Trust. A signed receipt containing an itemized list of the documents taken by Investigators Adams and Lewis was left with * * * of CB&T.

Prior to departing Little Rock, Investigators Adams and Lewis reviewed the Madison daily work film held by Central Bank & Trust to research the flow of funds through the Whitewater account as pulled from the monthly statements, which is a standard operating procedure for Investigations. Several checks payable to the Bank of Cherry Valley which identified loan numbers, were identified and copied from the daily work. Also copied were numerous checks payable to entities entitled Pembroke Manor, Rolling Manor, Madison Marketing and others, all of which were signed by James or Susan McDougal, payable to Whitewater Development and contained the notation "loan" in the memo filed on the check. Accounts were located and reviewed for these other identified entities; similar checks containing the "loan" notation were found to have been paid between the entities. At that time, both investigators concurred that additional research would be appropriate, and requested all available film relating to Madison Guaranty and returned it to Tulsa, leaving a receipt for the film, binders and original documents pulled from former office files with CB&T employee Bonnie Crocheron. Copies of the entity statements and checks were pulled and/or duplicated from film for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986. * * *

After the original film was duplicated, the duplicates were returned to Central Bank & Trust for their retention, and the original film was retained in Tulsa by an RTC research contractor. The criminal investigation of Madison then continued, as the civil claims had previously been closed out by PLS.

In conjunction with the ongoing Madison investigation, Kansas City Investigators Jean Lewis and Randy Knight traveled to Little Rock in 5/93 to revisit the Madison records held in the downtown warehouse. Upon arrival Investigator Lewis immediately noted the condition of the records was significantly more organized than it had been during the previous visit, and it was evident that a number of boxes had been cleared out.

During this visit to the warehouse, Investigator Lewis learned from the storage facility attendant that the law firm of Mitchell, Selig, Jackson, Tucker & White, former general counsel to Madison Guaranty Savings, also stored records at the warehouse.

A number of the remaining boxes were reviewed, and the keys returned to * * * at Central Bank & Trust. At that time, Investigator Lewis noted to * * * that the warehouse seemed to lack a number of boxes that had previously been there, and * * * advised that some of the records had been retrieved and were being held in a back room at the bank (CB&T). When asked why this had not been disclosed when the keys had been picked up rather than returned, Ms. Crocheron's response was "you didn't ask."

It should be noted that, according to the US Attorney's staff in Little Rock, * * * to Madison and was summoned before the Grand Jury for testimony. The outcome of that investigation has never been disclosed to this office.

In conjunction with the ongoing FBI investigation of the RTC's referrals, Investigations advised the FBI that additional original Madison Guaranty microfilm, along with the records at the warehouse, were under the control of Central Bank & Trust. It is the understanding of Kansas City Office of Investigations that the aforementioned records have now been subpoenaed by the U.S. Attorney's office and are now under the control of the Little Rock FBI. The original Madison film held by Investigators has also been turned over to the FBI along with other records subject to Grand Jury Subpoena.

MEMORANDUM

To: Criminal Admin File.
From: Jean Lewis, Criminal Investigator.
Date: May 3, 1993.
Re: Background remarks and conversation with AUSA Bob Roddey's office re: Madison Guaranty Savings referral.

In March 1993, shortly after the departure of former U.S. Attorney Chuck Banks, I was advised by AUSA Bob Roddey on an unofficial basis, that Banks had forwarded the "Madison referral" to Justice in Washington D.C. almost immediately after receiving it last September; Roddey also added that Banks had taken this action as the referral was "politically hot".

I contracted Roddey's office early this afternoon to see if AUSA Floyd Mac Dodson was still with the U.S. Attorney's office, or if he had left with Chuck Banks. I was advised by Roddey's secretary, Laura, that Dodson did, in fact, leave with Chuck Banks, and she offered me their number, which I declined. I asked her what would have happened to Dodson's cases, and she offered to "check the computer" and call me back, if I could give her a specific case, which I did, identifying Madison Guaranty Savings criminal referral #C0004.

Approximately five minutes later, Laura called back and advised me that no record of that referral showed up in their computer system; she then advised me that in conversing with AUSA Roddey, he told her that Banks had sent it to Justice in Washington, and that "we'd probably never hear about it again".

A letter inquiring about the status of the referral has been prepared to send to U.S.A. Pence later today.

Re: Additional conversation with Office of Legal Counsel for U.S. Attorneys, U.S. Justice Department, Washington, DC.

In following up my previous discussion with the Office of Legal Counsel on May 13, I contacted Dyone Mitchell (secretary) of that office to see if she had been able to determine the status of the Madison referral, as I had not heard back from her. She consulted her notes and advised me that they "have no record of that referral, it is not in their computer system, it has not been given to an attorney"; upon repeating this response to her, she reiterated "no ma'am, that referral has not been submitted to this office."

After advising Lee Ausen and Richard Iorio of this conversation, the decision was made to resubmit the referral through the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock, and contact Ms. Mitchell in the Office of Legal Counsel to see if that office should be copied on the referral and letter to Richard Pence, U.S. Attorney in Little Rock. I contacted Ms. Mitchell again to inquire as to whether that office should be copied on the referral. She said yes, and when I asked to whose attention it should be directed, she responded that it should be sent to Acting Assistant Attorney General Daniel Koffsky, as the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Dellinger, has not yet been confirmed.

The letter of re-submission will be prepared this afternoon, with a copy going to Mr. Koffsky's attention.

In following up on the suggestion that Mr. Daniel Koffsky, Acting Assistant Attorney General, be sent a copy of Madison referral No. C0004, I contacted the Office of Legal Counsel to verify the correct address. In speaking with Dyone Mitchell of that office, I reiterated the address provided by US Atty Richard Pence, which reads: Office of Legal Counsel, Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, U.S. Justice Department, Washington, DC 20530.

The letter provided the phone number (202) 514-2041.

Ms. Mitchell advised that the Office of Legal Counsel and the Executive Office for the U.S. Attorneys were two separate sections, and that the referral may have been forwarded to the Executive Office instead of Legal Counsel. She then connected me with the operator, who put me through to the Executive Office where I spoke with Stephanie Kennedy. I explained to Ms. Kennedy what I was looking for, and she said she would get back to me this afternoon.

She called me back at 3:30, and advised that she had forwarded the matter on to Donna Henneman in "Legal Counsel", who would check it out and call me back tomorrow. I then contacted Ms. Henneman to offer background information on what I was looking for. When I explained that it was a referral out of Madison Guaranty, forwarded to that office by Chuck Banks, she had immediate knowledge, stating "oh, the one involving the President and his wife". She then stated that the referral had been sent to that office (exactly which office is till unclear to me) as a special report for the attention of the Attorney General, and not as a referral for prosecution. She then stated that "anytime a referral comes in that would make the department look bad, or has political ramifications, it goes to the Attorney General." She further added that the referral had been submitted to that office "because of the political ramifications and political motivations", and then told me that referrals were not prosecuted out of that office. She then stated that the referral had been declined. I advised her that the referral had not been declined, and read her the letter sent to this office by U.S. Attorney Richard Pence. She acknowledged that she was confused, and told me she would speak with her supervisor, Deborah Westbrook, and have her call me back tomorrow. I then asked for Ms. Henneman's title, and she informed me that she was the Ethics Program Manager. I thanked her and ended the conversation.

I'll keep you posted if and when I hear from Ms. Westbrook.

I've just received a follow-up call from Donna Henneman at Justice in D.C. She informed me that after speaking with Deputy Director/EO Wayne Rich she learned that referral #C0004 had been sent to former Special Counsel Ira Raphelson. I noted that Mr. Raphelson is now in private practice, she concurred and said that she wasn't sure where it had gone after he left, but that she was going to call the "criminal fraud division at Justice" and see if they are prosecuting the case or if a declination letter has been issued. I restated that, to my knowledge, the referral had not been declined, and that I had been advised by an FBI agent in Little Rock that it was a "very solid case of check kiting, and was highly prosecutable."

I then identified the suspects named in the referral for her reference, and she thanked me and told me she'd be back in touch as soon as she found something. She also stated that she was growing increasingly frustrated with the situation, because she had seen the information, knew that it had come in, and couldn't understand why she was having such a hard time tracking where the referral and exhibits had gone.

To date, each time she has given me a date that she would call back, she has kept her word. I'll let you know when I hear from her again.

As we discussed this morning, I was going to contact Audrey Word at DOJ in Washington this afternoon; however, before I could call, Donna Henneman in the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys called me. It seems that Madison referral #C0004 has reappeared on her desk. Audrey Word was successful in locating the referral within the Fraud section of the Criminal Division and determined that the individual assigned to the referral "didn't want to deal with it", so she sent the referral and all pertinent info back to Donna Henneman for further disposition.

Donna advised me that the Criminal Division (no one specifically identified) sent a memo to Doug Frazier, Associate Deputy Attorney General (in Deputy Atty General Heyman's office) advising him that there was "no identifiable basis for recusal of the U.S. Attorney in the Eastern District of Arkansas"; this was a direct quote from the memo, as she read it. She then told me that she'd contacted Mr. Frazier who did not remember receiving the memo, and suggested that she get the memo and the referral to him for review and a final decision.

She has subsequently sent him both the referral and the memo, and said she'll keep me posted. I then advised her that during the intervening period, additional information has surfaced that would further support the allegations contained in the referral, so I would be most curious as to their decision. I then concluded the conversation by telling her "whatever the decision is, I need something in writing so that I can close out the file with a declination, or offer support for an ongoing case." She agreed and said she'd stay in touch.

I'll keep you posted.

At approximately 3:00 this afternoon, I spoke with Donna Henneman in the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, regarding the status of the Madison referral #C0004. She advised that she had sent the "package" to Associate Deputy Attorney General Doug Frazier on June 8, as we had previously discussed, but that she had received the entire package back on her desk today with no further answers, as Mr. Frazier was now the new U.S. Attorney in one of the Florida districts; she had not determined whether Mr. Frazier had taken any action prior to his departure, and had spoken with her supervisor regarding her next action shortly before I contacted her. She advised that she will attempt to contact Mr. Frazier in Florida sometime tomorrow, and determine what decision, if any, had been made.

She then advised that "this sort of thing happens all the time when we're trying to get the guys upstairs to make a decision." She said she'd be back in touch as soon as she had an answer from Doug Frazier, or his replacement, a Mr. Dave Margolis.

This was the 8th conversation I've had with Ms. Henneman since I first contacted her on May 19, 1993.

Donna Henneman (EO/US Attorneys) just called me back to let me know she'd spoke with former Associate Deputy Attorney General Doug Frazier. He advised her that he met with Tony Muscato, the Director of the Executive Office for U.S. Attorney's, and that the decision has been made to return the referral to the U.S. Attorney in the Eastern District of Little Rock, as there was "no basis for the recusal of the U.S. Attorney", and apparently a lack of "conflict of interest."

Ms. Henneman then added that she doubted whether or not the U.S. Attorney, Eastern District/Arkansas would be aware of this situation yet, but suggested that I wait a few days and then contact that office in Little Rock.

She asked to be kept posted on the outcome, and offered her continued assistance whenever and however possible.

I received a call this afternoon from a highly reliable and confidential source, that the Madison referral (C0004) has been returned to the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock, Arkansas. My source has advised me that the acting U.S. Attorney, Richard Pence, has stated he has no intention of acting on this referral, and plans to let it sit until such time as the new U.S. Attorney designee Paula Casey, takes office on either an interim or permanent basis. It was stated that there was displeasure at the fact that the referral had been returned to the Little Rock office, and that the reason cited for its return was that the Executive Office for U.S. Attorney's found no basis for recusal, and no conflict of interest emanating from the U.S. Attorney's office in the Eastern District. However, the acting U.S. Attorney is of the opinion that if the (strong) case against James McDougal is taken to trial, it will appear to the "sour grapes" due to his acquittal during his first bank fraud trial.

I was further advised that there is no definite date yet as to when Ms. Casey's confirmation will occur, and that is likely that she will assume her responsibilities on an interim basis. My source has advised that I will get a "head's up" call when Ms. Casey assumes her new responsibilities, but that such appointments have been delayed in the past, and may take a while.

I'll keep you advised should I hear anything further.

I've just had a conversation with Donna Henneman, Ethics Program Manager, Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys. I called Donna to make a final determination as to whether or not she wants formal notification of the existence of the subsequent referrals being submitted to the U.S. Attorney, Eastern District of Little Rock, on Madison.

In discussing the standard RTC procedure of the submission of referrals, she has requested that she be copied on the transmittal letters that go to the U.S. Attorney and FBI. At the time she receives the copies of those letters, she will then request the referrals and exhibits from the U.S. Attorney's office for any necessary follow up. So, at her request, I'll ask Donna Minton to cc: Ms. Henneman in her official capacity. She felt that a letter requesting copies at this point was unnecessary, and if it becomes necessary, she will go through her channels at Justice to obtain the documentation from U.S. Attorney Paula Casey. Donna has also requested that I provide a brief one paragraph summary of the content of the referrals with the transmittal letters, so that she will be aware of those with "sensitivity issues." I will be glad to provide the requested summary as an addendum paragraph to the bottom of each transmittal letter.

She then asked me about the final disposition of MGS&L referral C0004. I told her that I had been advised that it was received back in the U.S. Attorney's office, but that I had received no formal notification that a case had been opened, nor a declination letter. I expressed my concerns that the same situation could befall the next referrals to be submitted, and she assured me that she and her supervisor, Deb Westbrook, would stay closely in touch with the situation, due its potentially political ramifications, some of which I explained for her edification.

She asked me to stay in touch as to the responses that I get from the U.S. Attorney's office, and assured me that, if necessary, the "higher-ups" at Justice would make sure something got done with these referrals, including the first one, which in her words "should have been handled by now, one way or the other."

I'll keep you posted.

I've just received a call from Donna Henneman, Ethics Program Manager, Executive Office for U.S. Attorney's, Washington, D.C. She advised that she had spoken to her supervisor, Deb Westbrook, and Ms. Westbrooks supervisor, Doug Frazier, regarding whether or not the Executive Office wanted copies of the Madison referrals slated for submission this week. Ms. Westbrook and Mr. Frazier have determined that the Executive office should receive copies of the referrals and exhibits. Upon receipt, they will review them and determine whether to instruct the U.S. Attorney's office to act on them accordingly, or if they should be forwarded to the Public Integrity Section of DOJ for further review. In inquired as to the nature of the Public Integrity Section and was advised that it is the section of DOJ responsible for the prosecution of public officials. Ms. Henneman also advised that they have made the decision to get the Deputy Attorney General's office involved in this situation, and bring them up to speed.

I asked her to submit this request in writing, in order to document the Investigations file and she responded that she would do so, faxing me a letter this afternoon. I've provided her with the fax number and will copy you upon receipt of her letter.

To briefly summarize the situation to date, I contacted the Executive Office for U.S. Attorney's on May 13, 1993, at the written suggestion of U.S. Attorney Richard Pence, pursuant to his letter of May 10, 1993 regarding my written inquiry as to the final disposition of Madison referral #C0004, submitted on 9/1/92. Mr. Pence advised that the referral had been forwarded to the Executive Office by former U.S. Attorney Charles A. Banks due to what he deemed was a "conflict of interest". This information was relayed to Ms. Henneman during my first conversation with her. During subsequent calls I received from Ms. Henneman, she advised me as to her progress in tracking the whereabouts of referral #C0004, which she finally located and had forwarded back to her office on June 8, 1993. At that time, Ms. Henneman advised me that the decision had been made by personnel in the Criminal Division of DOJ that there was "no identifiable basis for recusal of the U.S. Attorney in the Eastern District of Arkansas", and that the referral would be forwarded back to the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock. Since that time, Ms. Henneman has contacted me to follow up on the final disposition of the referral. I have advised her that this office has not yet received notification of an opened case, or a letter declining prosecution. During these aforementioned conversations, the issue was raised as to further referrals, and whether the Executive Office should be copied on any further referrals to avoid a recurrence of circumstances. I received notification of that decision today when Ms. Henneman contacted me, as previously outlined.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

I've received a follow-up call from Donna Henneman with the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys. She spoke with her supervisor, Deb Westbrook, regarding my request for a written follow-up to her verbal request that the Executive Office be copied on all the Madison referrals and exhibits. Ms. Westbrook has withdrawn her initial request for copies, and stated that they will go through the U.S. Attorney's office to obtain copies rather than having us copy their office directly. Ms. Henneman indicated that this route would not make the U.S. Attorney's office feel as though the Executive Office was "going behind their back" in requesting copies of the referrals.

She then reiterated that she would like to be copied on the transmittal letters that will be sent with the referrals to the U.S. Attorneys and the FBI, with a brief summary paragraph outlining the suspects and content of each referral. I agreed to her request, and will make arrangements to provide the requested summary on the transmittal letters.

Just FYI...

Based on our conversation this afternoon regarding the OCC's inability to locate their past exams for UNB/Little Rock, I took a shot at a hunch, and made another call to Cristina Flechas, the attorney for the FDIC in Memphis who had previously advised me (in response to my written request of 6/23) that OCC would have been the regulatory agency for UNB during 1986.

Cristina, so I have learned, is no longer with the FDIC in Memphis. However, I spoke to her successor, Broderick Nichols, and outlined the previous request with him, asking him if he would do some additional followup just on the off chance that the FDIC might have done a concurrent exam on UNB with OCC at some point between 1983 and 1987. I then explained to him that the OCC seemed to be having some difficulty in locating their records, and advised him that I was informed by OCC that prior to 1991, UNB was actually First National Bank of Jacksonville. Well, it turns out that Broderick Nichols is from Little Rock. What a small world! And he evidently grew up knowing where Union National Plaza is and that Union National Bank was, and still is, the largest bank in Little Rock. He was somewhat concerned about the fact that OCC couldn't find their exams, and has offered his expeditious assistance in locating any concurrent exams done by FDIC. He's also offered to aid me in locating other potential leads and sources within OCC that might be able to rediscover the whereabouts of the UNB exams. He couldn't quite understand how the OCC could lose a $500 million bank. Does this sound familiar?

I'll keep you posted.

She asked if I'd received a declination letter on the first referral (C0004) from the U.S. Attorney in Little Rock. I told her that we had not received a declination to date. She then advised that her supervisor, Deb Westbrook, had evidently had a conversation with U.S. Attorney Paula Casey, and that Ms. Casey stated that she would be sending a declination letter to the RTC on that particular referral. No date was given, and Donna did not reference the date of the conversation between Ms. Westbrook and Ms. Casey. I asked Donna if she knew the basis for the declination, and she responded that she did not, and hadn't seen a copy of the letter either. She then suggested that if I do not receive the letter of declination within a fairly short time frame, to please let her know.

Donna also noted that Ms. Westbrook advised her that USA Casey had stated she would "deal" with the other referrals as well.

Re #7236 Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Criminal Referral Number C0004

DEAR MS. LEWIS: I am writing at the request of the Office of Legal Counsel, Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys of the U.S. Department of Justice to let you know the status of this referral.

As you know, this referral was reviewed by the Criminal Division of the U.S. Department of Justice at the request of the previous United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Arkansas. The matter was concluded before I began working in this office, and I was unaware that you had not been told until I was contacted by the Office of Legal Counsel. After receiving the call from Legal Counsel I reviewed the referral, and I concur with the opinion of the Department attorneys that there is insufficient information in the referral to sustain many of the allegations made by the investigators or to warrant the initiation of a criminal investigation.

Although I am declining to take further substantive action on this referral, my decision does not foreclose future prosecutions about the matters covered by the referral or related matters in the event that my office and the FBI are given access to records or information indicating that prosecutable cases can be made.

Sincerely,

PAULA J. CASEY,
United States Attorney.

Re #7236 Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Criminal Referral Number C0004

Hon. PAULA J. CASEY,
U.S. Attorney, Eastern District of Arkansas, Little Rock, AR.

DEAR MS. CASEY: I have received your October 27, 1993 letter regarding the above captioned thrift and referral. On the basis of comments contained within your letter, I am interpreting that correspondence as a formal declination to prosecute referral #C0004. You stipulated in your letter that this matter was concluded prior to the beginning of your tenure as the United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Arkansas. Prior to the receipt of your letter, RTC Investigations was not advised that the matter had been formally concluded.

Between September 1, 1992 and today's date, this office has received a total of three letters with regard to the aforementioned referral, including your letter of declination. The other two letters were from FBI/SAC Don Pettus, 12/15/92, acknowledging receipt of the referral, and from Acting United States Attorney Richard Pence, 5/10/93, advising this office that he was unaware of the referral status as it had been forwarded to the Executive Office for United States Attorney's by former United States Attorney Chuck Banks.

If there were other documents produced that are relative to the conclusion of this matter, I would appreciate receiving the appropriate copies.

The RTC Kansas City Office of Investigations will continue it's policy of cooperation with both the United States Attorney's office and the FBI on all referral related and investigate matters, making all pertinent records accessible as requested.

Should you have any further questions, or if this office may be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me at (816) 968-7237, or if I am unavailable, Supervisory Investigator Lee Ausen at (816) 968-7243 or Field Investigations Officer Richard Iorio at (816) 968-7212.

On Thursday, November 11, 1993, there was an article that appeared in the Washington Post concerning declination of prosecution on the first Madison referral that was transmitted to the Department of Justice (DOJ) on August 31, 1992.

Contained in the article was information that the referral had been reviewed by DOJ and that a decision had been made early on to decline on this referral and that when Paula Casey US Attorney, Little Rock, Arkansas, in fact issued the declination in October 1993, she was simply bringing this matter to a close.

The document attached clearly refutes this train of thought. In fact, it appears that no thorough review of the document had been conducted as late as June 23, 1993, some ten months after the referral had been initially transmitted. It was not until September 29, 1993 that this office was advised that the referral would be reviewed.

This whole issue might not be important, however, for purposes of credibility with regard to the RTC's efforts in this area, this memo and attachment are submitted for factual clarity.

RTC Criminal Referral #C0004 on Madison Guaranty Savings was completed on August 31, 1992, signed by RTC Kansas City Investigations management on September 1, 1992, and sent via certified mail on September 2, 1992, to Charles A. Banks U.S. Attorney, Eastern District of Arkansas, and SSA Steve Irons, FBI, Little Rock.

By early November 1992, no standard written response of prosecution or declination had been forthcoming from the U.S. Attorney's office. In mid-November 1992, the lead criminal investigator made the first of a number of verbal requests to both the U.S. Attorney and FBI in Little Rock for some form of written acknowledgement that the referral had been received and reviewed. A written acknowledgement dated December 15, 1992, from FBI SAC Don K. Pettus, was received by the lead criminal investigator on January 4, 1993. This acknowledgement stated that the referral had been received, and that further questions should be directed to AUSA Floyd Mac Dodson, who had also received the referral and exhibits. On January 7, 1993, the lead investigator had a conversation with AUSA Mac Dodson in which he advised that he wasn't sure the referral was still in the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock, and that if prosecution occurred, it would probably be through a special attorney sent to Little Rock to handle the situation.

For four months, there was no further communication or correspondence received by Investigations on this matter. In a May 3, 1993, conversation between Investigations and the U.S. Attorney's office, it was indicated that referral #C0004 had been "sent to Justice in Washington almost as soon as it was received last September". On May 4, 1993 Investigations sent a written inquiry to Acting U.S. Attorney, Richard M. Pence, requesting the status of the referral. On May 12, 1993, Investigations received a letter from Mr. Pence (dated May 10, 1993) stating that former U.S. Attorney Charles Banks had determined that his office had a conflict of interest with conducting an investigation or prosecuting criminal charges relating to referral #C0004, and had sent the referral and exhibits to the Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC"), Executive Office for U.S. Attorney's, U.S. Justice Department, Washington D.C. He stated that any further inquiries as to the status of the referral should be directed to that office, providing a phone number in Washington D.C.

As suggested by Mr. Pence, the lead investigator called the OLC on May 13, 1993. This initiated a series of 15 phone calls between the OLC and Investigations; 10 taking place between May 13 and June 29, 1993, and five transpiring between September 23 and October 27, 1993. The majority of these calls were incoming to Investigations, and provided information as to the progress being made with regard to locating and determining the status of the referral.

The June 23, 1993 conversation between Investigations and OLC indicated that the decision had been made to return the referral to the U.S. Attorney in Little Rock as there was "no basis for recusal of the U.S. Attorney" and apparent "lack of conflict of interest." During a conversation on September 23, the OLC inquired as to the "final disposition" of referral #C0004. They were advised by Investigations that no formal notification had been received of either a declination or intent to prosecute, Investigations then advised OLC that there were additional referrals pending; OLC then requested that Investigations remain in contact with the OLC regarding further communication from the U.S. Attorney in Little Rock.

On September 29, 1993, the OLC contacted Investigations and advised that 1) the Deputy Attorney General's office had been advised of the situation and 2) that the pending and prior referrals would be reviewed and a decision made as to whether or not they be forwarded to the Public Integrity Section of Justice and reviewed for potential prosecution. A verbal request was then made by OLC that they be copied on the transmittal letters to the U.S. Attorney accompanying the new referrals, and that they be further provided with a summary of each referral.

The nine new referrals were submitted to the U.S. Attorney and FBI in Little Rock on October 8, 1993. On October 13, 1993, the Office of Legal Counsel was provided with copies of the transmittal letters, and the requested summaries on each referral.

On October 27, 1993, Investigations received a call from OLC inquiring as to whether or not Investigations had received a declination letter on referral #C0004; the response was "no." Investigations was advised that U.S. Attorney Paula Casey had advised the OLC that she would be sending a letter of declination to RTC Investigations.

On November 1, 1993, Investigations received a letter dated October 27, 1993, from U.S. Attorney Paula Casey stating that the disposition of referral #C0004 had been concluded prior to her taking office, and that she "concurred with the opinion of the Department attorneys that there is insufficient information . . . in the referral to warrant the initiation of a criminal investigation."

On November 11, 1993, RTC Investigations learned through an article in the Washington Post, that Paula Casey had recused herself and her staff from any further dealing with the Madison referrals.

A few comments with regard to our conversation this afternoon about the pending meeting with Donald Mackay and his staff on 11/22.

You know, Richard knows, Donohue knows, Mike knows, and I know that Mackay is not coming here to look at records. Cut to the bottom line. He is coming here because he wants to be convinced that there either IS or IS NOT a very good case behind those referrals. He isn't coming specifically to discuss subpoena compliance, because he hasn't opened any cases yet. He's coming here to evaluate us, our work, and to try and decide just how good this case is, and how he can best deal with a very sensitive political situation. What would be easiest for him is to decide that, after meeting with RTC Investigations, he can conclude that there is no merit, and has accordingly advised Investigations that the matter will be dropped. If we don't convince him that those referrals are exceptionally solid, well prepared and supportable cases, then there is very little doubt that he will dispense with this situation in very short order.

Regardless of stated agenda, and regardless of whether or not I'm in attendance, he's going to try and make an objective assessment based on what is presented to him during the meeting. If that's the way the meeting starts out, then you better pull out all the stops to support the work we've done, or that's the last we'll hear of the Madison investigation. That's my instinct talking, and so far, it's been pretty much on target.

Michael is extremely knowledgable about Madison, and very capable of handling the situation. I would not do him the injustice of thinking otherwise. But internal political crap notwithstanding, if this meeting is going to turn into a turkey shoot, then you are going to need every loaded gun you've got to assist you in convincing this special prosecutor that the case is as good as it looks on the surface. And yes, we have strong documentation to support the allegations. But what's beneath the surface, including where we looked and why, who's tied to who, who's in business with who, who got paid for what and where all the internal and external ties are, isn't in writing. It's in my head.

I've had my say. The decision is up to you and Richard.

DEAR MR. To: Jane M. Jankowski, L. Richard Iorio, Lee O. Ausen, Michael X. Caron.
From: L. Jean Lewis.
Date: Thursday, January 6, 1994.

This is just to advise that earlier this evening, I received a call from * * * who started out her call with I've been lied to by the Justice Department". I advised her that I could not offer any comment, but that I would listen to what she had to say.

She stated that her sources from DOJ, who were there during the end of the Bush Administration, had advised her that the original RTC referral was taken much more seriously than the public has been led to believe, and that while they believed that the Clintons definitely stood to benefit from the alleged check kiting activities, they may not have had serious criminal culpability. They also advised her that the referral was left in Little Rock to prosecute by former USA Chuck Banks, because for Washington to be involved would look "too political." She said that they (her four DOJ sources) all told her that there was no basis for recusal, and no conflict of interest in Little Rock.

She then advised that Justice sources today informed her that it was line staff attorneys in the Criminal section of DOJ/DC that decided the referral warranted no further investigation, and instructed Paula Casey to decline.

She also noted that her previous DOJ sources had said that after the Clinton administration came into Washington, there were roadblocks put up around this referral, and that it had been their opinion that the RTC staff was attempting to do a legitimate job, but was being stymied by personnel at Justice for some reason. She asked me if it was true that the Clintons were named as witnesses on the referral; I declined comment. She asked me if it was true that the RTC had not been notified for months after the referral was allegedly declined by the staff attorneys in DC; I declined comment.

I told her that she would have to call you (Jane) in Public Affairs for any additional information, and she advised me that she'd already talked to you, and got no information. She stated that she understood that I was in a difficult position, for which I thanked her, and the conversation ended.

I found what she had to say very interesting. In the future, I'll comply with Richard and Lee's wishes that I not even listen to what a reporter has to say, and just offer a no comment. However, when someone starts out with "I've been lied to by the Justice Department", it's human nature to wonder whether or not it is true.

Thus endeth the lesson.

This document is a recap of a phone call that I just received from * * *, reporter * * * whose opening comment was "I've just been lied to by the Justice Department." My comment was that I would not be able to respond to any of her questions, but that I was fascinated by the fact that she thought she'd been lied to, so I would listen to what she had to say.

She outlined her credentials, stating that she'd written a book on drug trafficking, and had covered the "peanut loans", Bert Lance, Billy Carter, Jimmy Carter and the major governmental agencies during the Carter administration.

She'd been advised that I was the investigator on the case, and wanted to know which of the stories she'd been told by her sources at Justice were correct. Evidently, she had four former Justice sources who were there during the Bush administration, and that had been there when Chuck Banks sent the referral to Washington. The story they told her was as follows:

The referral was originally sent to DC as an "urgent report" for the Attorney General's review, due in part to the political sensitivity of some of the identified names, stating that Banks felt his office had a conflict of interest. (This coincides with what my letter from Richard Pence states, and what Donna Henneman told me during our many conversations on the whereabouts of the referral). There are conflicting stories about why Keeney wrote the memo referenced in the Schmidt/Isikoff story of 1/5; her sources stated that when the RTC referral was reviewed at Justice, it was taken much more seriously than the public has been led to believe, and that they believed that the Clinton's stood to benefit from the check kite although they may not have had serious criminal culpability. She asked if it was true that the Clinton's were named as witnesses on the referral; I told her no comment.

She said that her former Justice sources advised her that Banks had never recused himself, and that CID/DOJ DC left the referral in Little Rock and told Banks to prosecute, because 1) there was no conflict of interest, 2) there was no basis for recusal, and 3) that for Washington to get involved would "look too political" since it was right before and after the '92 election. Her sources also indicated that DOJ now seems to be deliberately making it look like the referral was "vague" and "ambiguous", and not to be taken seriously.

She stated that her sources told her that it appeared that the RTC folks were legitimately trying to do their job, and had legitimate concerns relating to the allegations contained in the referral, but that when the Clinton administration came in, somebody started putting up roadblocks on the referral, and her sources didn't know where it was coming from.

Her current Justice sources state that it was the line staff attorneys in CID/DOJ DC that made the decision several months ago that the referral warranted no further investigation, and instructed Paula Casey to decline accordingly; however, the RTC wasn't notified for months, which should have been corrected.

* * * went on to ask several questions, all of which I replied I could not answer, and referred her Public Affairs and Jane Jankowski. She stated that she'd already talked to Jane, and that it had gotten her nowhere. She asked if I knew anyone else that she could talk to, or if anyone that had left the RTC would have any information. I stated that there were no names that I could give her other than Jane Jankowski in Public Affairs. She then asked me if it was true that the RTC had not been notified of the referral declination for several months after it had been allegedly declined, and I told her no comment.

She said that she understood that I was in a difficult position, and but that she needed all the help she could get. I thanked her for understanding the difficultly of my position, advised her that I understood that she was only trying to do her job as a professional, but that I could not professionally or ethically make any comment about the investigation. She offered her phone numbers, which I did not write down. She thanked me for my time, and hung up.

My overall impression of this conversation was that she is very close to the heart of this story, and that she is almost on top of the "white paper" chronology outlining the sequence of events and communication between DOJ and RTC on C0004.

Lee Ausen was present for the entire conversation that I had with * * *, and suggested to me shortly before the conversation ended that I terminate the call with a "time out" gesture. He and Richard Iorio both advised that if she included anything in her story regarding that fact that I'd even listened to what she had to say, it would look bad for the RTC, and recommended that in the future, I not even listen to what a reporter has to say.

I advised them both that I felt that listening to what * * * had to say provided valuable information, and that there was no point in being rude to the press, anymore than there was any point in being rude to Justice or the FBI. "No comment" does not have to be offensive. I further stated that I would never do anything to undermine that efforts that the RTC has made, or take any action that would question our credibility or integrity, let alone do anything to compromise the investigation on which I have spent the past two years as the lead investigator.

I concurred that in the future, I would simply send the reporters to Public Affairs. However, I am very much inclined to believe that, on the basis of my personal, and documented, knowledge of what transpired during the conversations I had with Donna Henneman of DOJ/Office of Legal Counsel/Ethics section, that * * * is not far from the truth: it's beginning to sound like somebody, or multiple "somebodies" are trying to carefully control the outcome of any investigation surrounding the RTC referrals, and that the beginnings of a cover-up may have already started months ago.

RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION,
Washington, DC, January 14, 1994.

At the request of General Counsel Kulka and Deputy CEO Ryan, PLS and The Washington Office of Investigations have established a team to ascertain if any liability claims remain viable as a result of the recent legislation extending the statute of limitations from two to five years. In this case the resurrected statute expires at the end of February 1994.

Gary Watts of my staff, assisted by Tom Murray will be visiting your office this week and next. Please give them access to all records and workpapers, and to knowledgeable members of your staff, including records and documents that are covered by a Federal Grand Jury Subpoena.

Gary and Tom will be working with a team of PLS attorneys headed by Sr. Counsel Mark Gabrellian and including Terry Arbit, Jim Igo, April Breslaw, Carl Gamble and Suzanne Rigby. The objective is to complete the review of claims potential by next week. In addition the team will assist in compiling a detailed history of events, including the criminal referral and document control issues, to assist RTC management in communicating in a factual and unified way to Treasury and Justice officials, the special counsel and to appropriate committees and members of Congress.

To: L. Richard Iorio, Lee O. Ausen, Michael X. Caron.

From: L. Jean Lewis.

Date: Monday, February 7, 1994.

This is to advise you that I've had a conversation this morning with AUSA Fletcher Jackson of the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock. I called Mr. Jackson last week to make an inquiry regarding Independence Federal Savings in Batesville, Arkansas, out of which he had prosecuted a case regarding Duane Kepford sent me a memo quite some time ago about another; I recalled in having done a preliminary review of Independence, that Edney was given immunity for cooperating. I called Mr. Jackson last week to verify that fact, which he in turn did verify when he called back.

Mr. Jackson called Friday afternoon, and as I was out of the office, I intended to call him back this morning. Before I had the opportunity to call him, he called me.

We discussed, and he then changed the topic by asking me if Steve Irons had told me last fall not to talk to Fletcher. I told him that I preferred not to answer the question. He then stated that he "didn't have much use for ether Steve Irons or Gretchen Hall", and wanted to know what I'd been told. I advised him that Steve Irons had told me last fall that he thought it was a good idea if we (being Steve and myself) didn't talk to each other for a while about Madison. I further added that if had been suggested to me by my management here that any questions directed to me by the U.S. Attorney's office should probably come through Steve Irons or another FBI agent, and that since the FBI was my most appropriate contact, I should funnel responses to any questions through them. Mr. Jackson made a comment that he, and he was just looking for some input from me. He didn't get any.

He then added that he'd spoken to Jeff Gerrish recently, and that Gerrish was "absolutely astounded" that nothing more was ever done criminally with Madison, beyond the Castle Grande transaction. He asked me if I knew who Gerrish was; I advised him that year, I knew Jeff Gerrish, and no, I was not aware of Mr. Gerrish's opinions regarding the prosecution of criminal actions out of Madison, and that I'd formed by own conclusions on that point, and that's where they would stay—my own. I then advised Mr. Jackson that I did not wish to discuss Madison Guaranty, and we could change the subject, or hang up. He persisted, and I explained to him that I'd developed a respect for him during the past 2½ years, and that out of respect for the working relationship we've previously had, I wasn't going to talk about Madison. We then hung up after a cordial goodbye.

From: Julie F. Yanda.

Date: Wednesday, January 5, 1994.

Today at 1:30 p.m., Russ Kaufman and I received word that OCOS wanted to talk to us about the Madison Guaranty "investigation". We met with representatives of both WDC and KCO OCOS: Leonard Newmark (WDC), Michael Kohn (KCO) and a third individual whose name I cannot now remember. When Russ asked who had sent them to talk to us, Mr. Newmark replied that it had been his supervisor who had sent them and who had instructed them to be "proactive" in dealing with the issues this case would raise. Mr. Newmark indicated that they were not conducting an investigation, but rather an "inquiry".

The first question they asked was who had made the criminal referral on Madison Guaranty. Russ indicated that the referrals were made in accordance with RTC policy and committed to providing Mr. Kohn with a copy of the RTC policy. There was no further discussion of the referrals.

The second series of questions they asked dealt with what they characterized as "fitness and integrity" issues concerning the Rose Law Firm. First, they asked what investigation PLS had done into the representations the Rose Firm had made to state regulators to convince the regulators that Madison should remain open. I replied that PLS only investigates issues dealing with professional malpractice and that such inquiries would be made only in the context of conflict of interests issues involving outside counsel. I then explained that this case was not regionalized and that April had served as the PLS attorney on this case. Second, they asked who was the FDIC "conflicts contact" on this case. Third, they asked what information we had concerning the audit report the Rose Firm had used to convince regulators that Madison should remain open and then later relied upon in a malpractice claim against Frost & Co. Again, I told them that I had no information concerning these issues.

Our discussion lasted no more than 10 minutes. Russ and I then called Richard Iorio and discussed with him the substance of our conversation with OCOS.

[Memorandum]

FEBRUARY 7, 1985.

To: Governor Bill Clinton.
From: Jim McDougal.

Kathy called yesterday to ask for my recommendations for two people to fill the vacancies on the State Savings and Loan Board.

For the industry position from the 2nd Congressional District, I recommend John Latham, who is chairman of the board of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association. Mr. Latham is a CPA and a licensed attorney. He is a major contributor to your campaign. His board of directors is 50% Black, giving his institution the largest minority representation of any financial institution in the State.

For the consumer position from the 4th Congressional District, I recommend Dr. Jerry Kendall of Camden. Dr. Kendall is a popular figure at Camden. His wife, Nancy from Magnolia, is widely and favorably know. Their complete support of your administration is a certainty.

Bill, we are down to only about 15 State-chartered savings and loan institutions and I am about the only one around who has any interest in this board.

Members of the Committee will need access to this material to prepare for the upcoming hearings and to perform their ongoing oversight responsibilities. (As I am sure you are aware, documents provided to the Ranking Member are available to the Committee as a whole under the Committee rules.) The documents requested would include, but not be limited to, administrative files, examination reports, interoffice memorandum, notes and minutes of meetings (including telephonic meeting), correspondence, electronic mail, and agreements the RTC entered into with private sector contractors during the resolution of Madison. In addition to documents in possession at RTC-Washington, I request access to all documents related to Madison held at RTC field offices. Furthermore, please provide the names and titles of all RTC employees involved with the disposition of Madison.

Please have your staff contact Joe Seidel at (202)226-3241 or Mike McGarry at (202)225-2258 to discuss arrangements to review the aforementioned documents as soon as possible. As you are aware, I have previously requested access to these documents for use in performing other Committee functions. My final letter concerning that request, was forwarded yesterday, March 7, 1994. If the agency decisions to comply with the request, we will, of course, consider this request satisfied as well.

I appreciate you assistance and look forward to your cooperation

Sincerely,

JAMES A LEACH,

Mr. JONATHAN FIECHTER,
Acting Director, Office of Thrift Supervision, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. FIECHTER: You have recently received letters from Congressman Jim Leach requesting access to all documents you possess concerning Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan and its subsidiaries. The March 8, 1994 letter states that, "Members of the Committee will need access to this material to prepare for the upcoming [RTC oversight] hearings and to perform their ongoing oversight responsibilities."

This letter is to inform you that the Banking Committee is not conducting an investigation of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan or related matters at this time. Mr. Leach's requests do not constitute a Rule X or Rule XI investigation under the House Rules. A hearing does not provide the basis for a member of Congress to obtain documents to which he or she is not otherwise entitled. I will request any information needed by the Committee in order to prepare for any Thrift Depositor Protection Board Oversight hearings pursuant to section 21A(k)(6) of the FHLB Act and will make it available to members of the Committee, as appropriate.

I trust that you will give Congressman Leach's requests the consideration they merit and extend to him the same courtesies you would extend to any member of Congress.

Sincerely,

HENRY B. GONZALEZ,

Mr. ANDREW C. HOVE, JR.,
Acting Chairman, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Member, Thrift Depositor Protection Oversight Board, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. HOVE: You have previously been invited by letter dated March 3, 1994 to appear before the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs for the purpose of the semiannual appearance of the Thrift Depositor Protection Oversight Board. I expect that Republican members of the Committee may use the opportunity of the Oversight Board hearing to pursue extraneous matters, including Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan. Any questions regarding Madison Guaranty Savings and Loans, matters that are the subject of pending investigations by Special Counsel Fiske or other law enforcement authorities, or other extraneous matters not specifically set forth in section 21A(k)(6) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act or the March 3, 1994 invitation letter will not be considered pertinent at the hearing and need not be answered by you.

I was the primary sponsor of the provision to require the Oversight Board to appear on a semiannual basis so that the Committee could oversee its activities. The recent appropriation of funds to the RTC, the management reforms, and FDIC-RTC transition measures required under Public Law 103-24 clearly require the complete and full attention of the Committee in order to have a successful Oversight Board hearing. I intend to keep the hearing so focused.

I look forward to your March 4, 1994 appearance.

MINUTES OF MEETING, BOARD OF DIRECTORS, MADISON FINANCIAL CORPORATION, APRIL 17, 1985

The Board of Directors of Madison Financial Corporation met on April 17, 1985, at 1:00 p.m. at the offices of Madison Financial Corporation at 16th and Main Streets, Little Rock, Arkansas. All directors were present. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved as recorded.

The first order of business, introduced by John Latham, was the matter of authorizing prepayment of Jim McDougal's bonus. After a full discussion, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, with Jim McDougal abstaining from the voting: "RESOLVED, that the Corporation pre-pay to Jim McDougal $30,000.00 of his annual bonus in recognition of the profits of the prior year, and that said bonus is to be paid directly to Whitewater Development."

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned.

MEMO

To: John Latham.
From: Jim McDougal.
Date: July 1, 1986.

Madison Marketing

When the service corporation undertook its first land development project in the spring of 1983, it was determined to primarily advertise the home sites through the use of television. The firm of Rothman and Lowery was retained as Madison's advertising agency. Because her education is in speech and drama, Mrs. McDougal assisted in preparing of copy for the commercials, appeared in the commercials, and assisted in editing the commercials. She either wrote or rewrote all newspaper copy to advertise the subdivision. Until the summer of 1984, the corporation undertook the development of other subdivisions in addition to Maple Creek Farms.

During this period the creative audio and visual quality of the production produced for the media by Rothman and Lowery progressively deteriorated. Additionally, the firm frequently made mistakes as to the placement of advertising or omitted to place advertising when instructed to do so.

In late summer 1984, after advising the board of directors of the savings and loan and after seeking the legal opinion from counsel, Mrs. McDougal formed Madison Marketing. She undertook, with hired assistants, the writing of copy, taping of spots, and placement of advertising for both the savings and loan and the service corporation. For the work she received exactly the same fee which had been paid Rothman and Lowery, with the exception of the fact that she did not charge for production of television spots or the writing of newspaper copy.

Additionally, she negotiated a much lower rate structure with the television stations than the company had been paying when the ads were placed through Rothman and Lowery. In late January, 1985, Mrs. McDougal permitted Madison Marketing to become a subsidiary of Madison Financial Corporation. Because Madison Marketing was at this point a "recognized agency" by the electronic media, this resulted in Madison Financial Corporation receiving the 15 percent discount normally given advertising agencies. Mrs. McDougal continues to perform all the aforementioned duties in connection with the company's advertising at no fee.

Madison Real Estate

When initial sales began at Maple Creek Farms in April of 1983, the listing broker was Perryman Realty Company, Inc. Mr. Perryman had, at this time, other interests including his own subdivisions. This prohibited his devoting the seven days a week necessary to the sales effort then under way at Maple Creek Farms and his listing was terminated.

Some of Mr. Perryman's better salesmen desired to remain at Maple Creek and continue selling. However, Arkansas law requires that real estate salesmen be under the direct supervision of a licensed real estate broker. Mrs. McDougal holds a valid broker's license. In 1983, her license was held under the name "McDougal Real Estate" although she was not actively involved in the sale of real estate at this time.

Upon the termination of Mr. Perryman's activities, Mrs. McDougal changed the name of her real estate company to "Madison Real Estate Company". Madison Real Estate became a wholly owned subsidiary of Madison Financial Corporation. From that time until the present, Mrs. McDougal has performed the duty of supervision broker for the various salesmen working for Madison Real Estate. Although it is normal practice that the supervising broker receives at least thirty percent of commissions generated by the salesmen under their supervision, Mrs. McDougal charged no such fees. The only fees Mrs. McDougal has received from Madison Real Estate are fees for sales she made personally.

Sorenson Enterprises

Sorenson Enterprises is a sole proprietorship owned by Erik Sorenson. Mr. Sorenson is a general contractor engaged in construction and landscaping work. He built the sales office for the subdivision at Camden known as Greentree Farms. He also built the sales office at Fair Oaks. At several of our subdivisions in southern Arkansas, he supervised the painting and erection of signs in entranceways. He employed in these subdivisions a crew of men engaged in selective clearing of trees, planting of grass, and the general beautification of the subdivisions. Concurrent with this activity, Mr. Sorenson was engaged in building houses for other persons unrelated to this company.

Because of the observed quality of his workmanship, he was placed under Mr. Dutton's command at Little Rock, and given the responsibility of constructing or making additions to various houses at Maple Creek Farms owned by the company. When the company undertook the development of Castle Grande Estates, an arrangement was negotiated with Mr. Sorenson whereby for a flat monthly fee he would supervise the assembling of the modular houses and these duties involved the preparation of footings and foundations, the adding of brick trim, and supervision of correcting any defect in the workmanship of the house, and supervision of the installation of central air conditioning and utilities.

Madison Properties

Madison Properties assets consists primarily of a very large masonry building located on several acres with two producing gas wells in Madison County just south of the county seat of Huntsville. Madison Properties has no connection to Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan or Madison Financial Corporation.

Master Developers

Three stockholders are working in conjunction with the development of 59 acres located on 145th Street. Two stockholders have extensive experience in real estate development and sales. These individuals have engaged in exhaustive market research to determine immediate commercial use for subject property. Their feasibility and marketing studies indicate the immediate need for a fast-food outlet to serve the several hundred industrial and service employees presently employed within 1,500 feet of subject location. There is no such outlet within several miles to serve the heavily populated suburban areas surrounding the property. Additional trade is anticipated from traffic generated by the freeway which services the location.

For the same reasons outlined above, need is indicated for a convenience store and gasoline outlet. As mentioned above a convenience store is essential to the successful sale of residential lots. Roadrunner, Incorporation, a highly successful Arkansas based convenience store and gasoline outlet franchiser, has conducted an extensive market survey which has concluded that such a facility located on subject property would be successful. Two of the principals of Master Developers have arranged for separate financing to erect such a facility.

Also, negotiations are far advanced for the sale of two acres of the property to a building supply and insulation firm.

The preliminary master development plan for the business park to be created is completed and a copy is attached.

Island Construction

The lots at Campobello which were under development last year, were so heavily overgrown with spruce trees and other foliage, that our sales people were finding it difficult to walk the prospects from the road to the ocean therefore, greatly inhibiting the sale of frontage lots.

Additionally, the density of the foliage prohibited a view of the ocean from the interior lots lying immediately behind the ocean fronts lots, thereby diminishing the value of those lots because of this lack of view of the water.

Initially, unsuccessful attempts were made to employ timber cutters with chain saws to selectively clear the ocean front lots. This process proved too slow and too costly. When it was determined that lot preparation could not keep pace with sales using this method and further determined that this process distracted from the beauty of the lots because it left them covered with stumps, another solution was sought.

Mr. Randolph, who was thoroughly familiar with the use of mechanical methods employed by the company to prepare lots for sale and who had had extensive experience working in various subdivisions owned by the company, was asked to come to Campobello to devise a method of overcoming this landscaping and marketing problem. Upon his arrival he immediately leased the proper bull dozer for such work and trained bull dozer operators living on the island as to the proper method of selectively clearing the lots and removal of the resulting debris from the lots. Direct correlation by the increasing sales and his arrival is easily demonstrative. For example, every lot he caused to be prepared in his first week of work was sold that weekend. His additional duties involved building driveways which permitted access from the main thoroughfare through the lot to the water's edge.

The company owns a large tract of land abutting the highway immediately at the entrance to the island. Our predecessor in title had cut the timber from this tract some years ago. When this sort of clear cutting occurs on that island, a large bushy plant, which is quite unattractive, grows to a great height and has an especially virulent root system which inhibits its removal effectively even by a bull dozer. Mr. Randolph purchased a new 70 horsepower tractor than attached a device known as a "tree eater" to be used in the eradication of this plant. This method was beautified to as to make the ocean visible, thus greatly enhancing the value of our entire property. Mr. Randolph left the tractor he purchased at Campobello where it is in use until this time. Personnel he trained in the proper method of beautification of our property are continuing the process this year with very beneficial effects.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, February 3, 1994.

Mr. ROGER C. ALTMAN,
Interim CEO, Resolution Trust Corporation, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. ALTMAN: I am in receipt of your February 1, 1994 response to the letter initiated by Senate Republican leadership concerning Madison Savings and Loan and I am pleased to learn that the RTC "will vigorously pursue all appropriate remedies" with regard to Madison's failure. It seems self-apparent that in order for the RTC to pursue vigorously all remedies it must have all relevant information at its disposal. Accordingly, I urge the RTC to seek and review all Whitewater Development Corporation documents turned over by the White House to the Justice Department.

In its investigation of Madison, the Minority has uncovered links between Madison and Whitewater, some of which may have contributed to the thrift's failure. Not only did James and Susan McDougal hold significant ownership interest in both entities (approximately two thirds in Madison and one half in Whitewater), but the other joint owners of Whitewater (Bill and Hillary Clinton) appear to have benefited directly and indirectly from the application of Madison resources. [See the attached memo.]

If the White House choose to use the Justice Department to shield Whitewater documents not only from the public and Congress, but from other government agencies, such as the RTC, which have legitimate public law enforcement responsibilities, it is hard to believe a responsible resolution of the issues involved can be made by regulatory authorities.

I have high regard for your personal integrity, but as you know, from the beginning, it has been an awkward situation to have a presidentially appointed and confirmed officer of the Treasury Department also head an independent federal agency, the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC). When this prospect was first suggested at the beginning of the Clinton Administration, it did not strike the Minority as overly unreasonable for a month or two given the fact that no RTC head had been selected.

However, it has been over a year since the Administration has been in office and it can only be described as structurally unseemly for a political appointee of an Executive branch department to make what are in effect, law enforcement decisions for an independent federal agency as they may touch upon the President.

Accordingly, I would urge that you request from the Department of Treasury's General Counsel and Ethics Office advice as to whether you, as interim CEO of the RTC, are obligated to rescue yourself from any decisions concerning the resolution of Madison Guaranty. Just as the special counsel law was designed to relieve the Attorney General from an ethical dilemma of being both chief law enforcement officer for the nation and chief legal advisor to the President in circumstances when the President or a high level Administration officer is the subject of investigation, so it would appear ethically questionable for a political appointee of the Department of Treasury to make decisions for an independent federal agency when the President may be implicated in enforcement and civil actions.

In this regard, it should be clear that the issue is not whether a presidentially appointed official can oversee an investigation involving the President. Rather the issue is that officials with this responsibility should be confirmed for the job with that particular accountability. As you will recall it was a political appointee confirmed by the Senate that issued a cease and desist order for engaging in conflicts of interest against the son of a former President.

As you know, despite your strong letter to the Chairman of the House Banking Committee recommending against extension, Congress last year extended the statute of limitations for civil lawsuits brought against S&L wrongdoers. As you pointed out in your most recent letter, this extension "has afforded the RTC an opportunity to investigate further any civil claims which may be asserted against individuals or entities associated with Madison Guaranty for fraud, intentional misconduct resulting in unjust enrichment, or international misconduct resulting in substantial loss to the institution." Given, however, the impending running of the statute of limitations for certain kinds of actions, time is clearly of the essence for the RTC to make judgments about civil accountability in the failure of Madison.

Finally, I would like to reiterate my request, pursuant to Rules X and XI of the House Rules for all documents related to Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, Little Rock, Arkansas. As you know, on December 9, 1993, I wrote the RTC requesting access to all documents related to Madison Guaranty and its subsidiaries.

House and Committee Rules, House practices, and judicial precedent support the proposition that the Ranking Minority Member is the functional counterpart to the Chairman for Committee action. This being the case, a request for documents made by the Ranking Minority Member has parallel standing with a request made by the Chairman of the Committee. The Ranking Minority Member clearly has a voice in the process and is entitled to information that will enable the Ranking Minority Member to carry out his constitutionally mandated oversight responsibilities.

Therefore, the courtesy of a definitive reply to this document request is requested by 12 noon, Monday, February 7, 1994. On this matter, it is urged that you also consult with the Ethics Office as to the relevance of the previously discussed recusal issue.

Again, let me stress that to the degree a conflict situation may exist in this matter in no way reflects on your personal integrity. It is simply an awkward circumstance in contrast to a personal embarrassment.

Sincerely,

JAMES A. LEACH,
Ranking Member.

Enclosure.

MEMORANDUM

To: Congressman Leach.
From: Banking Minority Staff.
Re: Madison Guaranty ("Madison").

In reviewing documents related to Madison in the possession of Minority Banking, we have come across material which may indicate direct payment of a loan of Bill Clinton's by Madison through a subsidiary.

Since the Minority's investigation is concerned with the possible misuse of federally insured funds to assist Whitewater and/or the former Governor, we thought we should share the following information with you.

SUMMARY

Based on documentary evidence available to the Minority, it appears that Madison Marketing served, in at least one instance, as a conduit of funds from Madison Guaranty to Whitewater and Governor Clinton. If this is correct, it would appear that insured funds from the failed Madison Guaranty were diverted and directly benefitted the Governor and his investment in Whitewater, a claim Clinton had denied.

DOCUMENTATION

The 1983, Bill Clinton obtained a loan from Security Bank of Paragould, Arkansas for approximately $20,800 (loan #975-585, Bill Clinton). The money from this loan was used to pay off the remaining balance of a loan at Madison Bank and Trust of Kingston, Arkansas that was provided for the purpose of constructing a modular home on lot #13 at Whitewater Estates. The loan at Madison Bank was provided in 1980 to Hillary Clinton in the amount of $30,000.

On November 8, 1985, James McDougal sent a letter accompanied by a check to Charles Campbell, Vice President of Security Bank of Paragould, for $7,322.42. The letter from McDougal states that the check is principal and interest payment on "Note #957-585, Bill Clinton." [Note: It appears that the loan number is a typographical error with the superimposing of numbers 5 and 7 in the first three digits.]

The check McDougal enclosed with his letter to Mr. Campbell is a Whitewater Development Corporation check dated November 7, 1985. The loan number referenced on the memo portion of the check is "Note #95-585."

According to the check ledgers for the Whitewater Development Corporation (WDC), the corporation's checking account had the following balances: $189.50 on 10-10-85; and, $12.49 on 10-31-85. However, in order to cover the payment of $7,322.40 on the Clinton loan, a deposit is recorded on November 8, 1985 in the amount of $7,500.00. The deposit is listed as coming from "Madison Marketing."

A 1986 Federal Home Loan Bank Board exam gives the impression that Madison Marketing was largely a sham corporation used to divert federally insured resources to insiders. The exam notes that "Until 1986, Susan McDougal owned Madison Marketing." The report also states the following:

"Madison Marketing is paid for doing all the general advertising for Madison Guaranty and most of the advertising for Madison Financial's land development projects. All of Madison Marketing's business is derived from Madison Guaranty or its subsidiaries. Since 1983 these payments total $1,532,000.

"Given the evidence of Madison Marketing's invoices, it is questionable how much of these advertising services are actually performed by the firm. The actual work * * * appears to be performed by others. It would appear that Madison Guaranty could have an employee perform similar work for much less money.

"Mr. Latham [an officer of Madison] stated that Madison Marketing made no payments to any stockholders. This statement is false. As part of a test for such payments, the examiners discovered two remittances from Madison Marketing to Susan McDougal [a large stockholder of Madison] which total $50,000. This was a test, and there may be additional payments."

CONCLUSION

Given the above circumstances, it would appear that federally insured deposits (i.e., funds from Madison Guaranty through Madison Marketing), which, with the later failure of Madison became, in effect, taxpayer obligations, were transferred for the direct personal benefit of the former Governor.

The above payment also raises the question of whether Whitewater was treated as an affiliate or related interest of Madison Guaranty and therefore subject to conflict of interest statutes. From a legal perspective, it could be argued that the McDougals' controlling interest in Madison Guaranty and their substantial ownership interest in Whitewater could qualify Whitewater as an "affiliate" of Madison Guaranty. Even if Whitewater is not considered a subsidiary, related interest, or affiliate of Madison Guaranty, such an extension of funds to a presumably "unaffiliated" entity would be very unusual and suspect.

It has been publicly reported, with respect to this loan repayment, that both Whitewater and the Clintons took a tax deduction related to interest paid on the same loan—which the Clintons later recognized as improper double deduction after an article ran in the New York Times. What remains unclear is the largest question of whether the funds provided by Madison to reduce the Clinton's liability were proper or properly reported as income for income tax purposes.

As you know, we have received broad hints from within the RTC that the agency has had under review money transfers from Madison to Whitewater. We will not know whether this type of activity was more pervasive and part of a larger pattern unless, and until, the agency provides us the documents we have requested. If Madison provided any direct or indirect assistance to Whitewater, presumably half the value of such would redound to the advantage of each of the half owners. In any regard, the above money transfer underscores that then Governor Clinton had personal liabilities reduced by a payment from Madison. Such payment presumably carries ethical as well as tax implications and is part and parcel of the $47 to $60 million estimated taxpayer loss at Madison.

Comments

Information concerning the Institution's policies, practices and condition, considered to be of supervisory interest or concern, is shown below.

A. Objectionable Conflicts of Interest

Conflicts of interest involving James McDougal, Susan McDougal, and William Henley have been detrimental to the safety and soundness of the Institution. These individuals are in control of the Institution (Madison Guaranty) through their stock ownership. James McDougal owns 63.5% of the outstanding Madison shares. His wife, Susan McDougal, owns 12.6%, and her brother, William Henley owns 8.5%. In addition to his ownership control, Mr. McDougal, as President of the Institution's subsidiary (Madison Financial), has complete control of the land development projects discussed in comment B.

This control enabled Mr. McDougal to structure the development and financing of the projects so that substantial cash payments could be diverted to himself, Susan McDougal, William Henley and others. These payments have directly benefited these individuals, but Madison Guaranty has received little or nothing in return. Though they have been structured to avoid specific Insurance Regulations, these payments are contrary to the general policy of the FHLBB concerning conflicts of interest as stated in Insurance Regulation 571.7 and FHLBB Memorandum R-19a.

Many of these payments have been funneled through business entities which are owned or controlled by the McDougals, employees, relatives of employees, or close friends of the McDougals and Henley. In the report, reference will be made to these individuals as the McDougal-Henley Group. Though the activities of these business entities may be appropriate for a savings and loan institution to perform, the advantages associated with these activities accrue to the McDougals and Henley, rather than Madison Guaranty. As such, these arrangements are contrary to the FHLBB's policy concerning appropriations of corporate opportunity as explained by Insurance Regulation 571.9.

Mr. McDougal stated that there were no violations of the conflict of interest regulations.

There are several of these business entities, none of which are disclosed on the Examination Management Questionnaire. The investigation of these businesses remains incomplete. For example, the amount of Madison Guaranty loan proceeds going to many of the entities is unknown. Formal investigative powers have been granted; in this case, under Section 407(m)(2) of the National Housing Act. Current findings, with respect to three of the more important business entities, are discussed below.

1. Madison Real Estate.

Madison Financial pays commissions to Madison Real Estate for selling land from Madison Financial's developments. These commissions in turn are distributed to the sales personnel. Mr. Latham stated that Madison Real Estate was "a division" of Madison Financial. Mr. McDougal stated that Madison Real Estate was essentially formed in order to use Susan McDougal's real estate sales license which, in turn, was being used by Madison Financial to market the projects. But Madison Real Estate's checking account was not on Madison Financial's books until after management was notified of this fact by the examiners. Also, Madison Real estate is not registered in county records as a name being used by Madison Financial or anyone else.

Since the beginning of 1983, after the McDougals and Henley acquired Madison Guaranty, substantial commissions were paid through Madison Real Estate to William Henley ($427,683) and Susan McDougal ($137,500). In Henley's case, a substantial portion of these funds were advances against commissions to be earned on future land sales. Other McDougal-Henley Group members, who received substantial commissions, are Pat Harris ($242,289) and James Henley ($154,690), who is the brother of Susan McDougal and William Henley. These payments represent most of the commissions paid by Madison Financial to Madison Real Estate, which significantly derives all of its business from Madison Financial.

Many of the sales, which generated these commissions, were to McDougal-Henley Group members who are acting as straw buyers. Madison Guaranty essentially retained the risks of ownership on these transactions because it fully financed these sales including the cash sales commissions. Thus, Madison Guaranty's position deteriorated because it retained the same ownership risks as before, but paid cash fees to these individuals. In addition, fees paid through Madison Real Estate were used as down payments in some of the straw land purchases in an apparent attempt to disguise 100% funding of the purchase by Madison Guaranty and its subsidiaries.

Messrs. McDougal and Latham cited an April 24, 1985 letter from a Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas Supervisory Agent as permission to pay real estate sales commissions to Madison Real Estate. However, this letter in part, asks that the Board of Directors review Insurance Regulation 571.7 which is cited above in this comment.

2. Madison Marketing.

Madison Marketing is paid for doing all the general advertising for Madison Guaranty and most of the advertising for Madison Financial's land development projects. All of Madison Marketing's business is derived from Madison Guaranty or its subsidiaries. Since 1983 these payments total $1,532,000. Until February 1986, Susan McDougal owned Madison Marketing. During a portion of this time, it was a corporation which was incorporated by Lisa Aunspaugh, reportedly a close friend of Susan McDougal.

Mr. Latham stated that after February 1986, Madison Marketing became an entity "d/b/a (doing business as)" for Madison Financial and ceased to be a corporation. However, it is not registered as a "d/b/a" in the County records. Also, its checking account has never been recorded on the books of Madison Financial.

Given the evidence of Madison Marketing's invoices, it is questionable how much of these advertising services are actually performed by the firm. The actual work of advertising, such as the design and production of commercials and providing air time or newspaper space, appears to be performed by others. Madison Marketing apparently just pays the bills of other providers and adds a 15% fee of its own. Examiners estimated this fee to be approximately $200,000 since 1983. It would appear that Madison Guaranty could have an employee perform similar work for much less money.

Mr. Latham stated that Madison Marketing made no payments to any stockholders. This statement is false. As a part of a test for such payments, the examiners discovered two remittances from Madison Marketing to Susan McDougal which total $50,000. This was a text, and there may be additional payments.

3. Designer's Construction.

Designer's Construction performs construction work on some of the land development projects and on some of the property securing Madison Guaranty loans. In 1985 and to date in 1986, $247,000 was paid for work performed for Madison Guaranty and its subsidiaries. The amount of loan proceeds paid to Designer's Construction on work for third party borrowers is unknown.

IMPROVING AMERICA'S SCHOOLS ACT OF 1994

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEWIS of Georgia). Pursuant to House Resolution 366 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 6.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, with Mr. DARDEN, chairman pro tempore, in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Tuesday, March 22, 1994, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DOOLITTLE] had been disposed of, and title IX of the proposed Elementary and Secondary Education Act was open for amendment at any point.

Are there further amendments to this title?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HANCOCK

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: —Page 762, after line 8, insert the following:

SEC. 9506. PROHIBITION AGAINST FUNDS FOR HOMOSEXUAL SUPPORT.

"(A) PROHIBITION.—No local educational agency that receives funds under this Act shall implement or carry out a program or activity that has either the purpose or effect of encouraging or supporting homosexual as a positive lifestyle alternative.

"(b) DEFINITION.—A program or activity, for purposes of this section, includes the distribution of instructional materials, instruction, counseling, or other services on school grounds, or referral of a pupil to an organization that affirms a homosexual lifestyle.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very simple. It will prohibit any local educational agency that receives funds under H.R. 6 from implementing or carrying out any program or activity which has either the purpose or effect of promoting homosexuality as a positive lifestyle alternative. I just want to make clear from the very beginning this amendment is not an unfunded mandate. If anything, it is the reverse of a mandate.

My amendment does not impose on schools any duty to undertake a new program or activity. It creates no requirement for schools to denounce homosexuality in the classroom or to undertake a curriculum of any kind on the subject of homosexuality. Very importantly, it does not prevent schools from conducting traditional hygiene or health classes. All of these decisions are up to local elected school boards and parents, which is the way it ought to be.

This amendment does not even impose any new requirements to make reports or certifications to the Federal Government, which is different from a lot of legislation we pass here in Congress. It creates no extra expense or special burdens. We are saving money, which is really rare. All I am attempting to do is prevent the use of taxpayers' dollars to promote homosexuality. That is all.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment does restrict what schools can do with Federal funds. It also restricts what they can do with their own resources if they accept Federal dollars. This is necessary to prevent the shell game we have seen with other grantees who commingle Federal funds with other moneys. My amendment is the only way to protect Federal taxpayers from that kind of nonsense and evasion.

Some Members may ask why this amendment is necessary at all. Many may not be aware of what sort of prohomosexual propaganda is actually infiltrating our public schools. Believe it or not, right now in community after community, our children are being exposed to the homosexual lifestyle as early as elementary school. That lifestyle is presented in an approving manner and as a legitimate alternative lifestyle. This clearly defies the values of the overwhelming majority of parents and taxpayers throughout America.

There are a host of programs and groups, including project 10, since named project 21, I think it is pronounced SIECUS, Sex Information and Education Council of the United States, Mutual Caring, Mutual Sharing, and others which teach young people homosexuality is normal, healthy, and desirable.

Students must explore their sexual feelings through secret counseling. They are referred to gay and lesbian community centers to meet and interact with homosexual adults. Film strips, books, and other materials graphically portray homosexual acts, acts which are not only offensive but dangerous behavior which can expose one to AIDS and other serious health risks. Some even have a buddy system to help match up homosexual couples.

Of course, traditional teachings against homosexuality are systematically ridiculed as ignorance and bigotry. Where is this? So far, in Alaska, California, Connecticut, Hawaii, Louisiana, Massachusetts Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont, Virginia, and elsewhere.

In New York City, even elementary schools are exposed to prohomosexual propaganda, including two books entitled, "Heather's two Mommies," and "Daddy's Roommate." This is a clear effort to target our young people.

One homosexual activist, Mr. Michael Swift, made this clear in the Boston Gay Community News, He said of the homosexual movement,

> We shall sodomize your sons feeble emblems of your masculinity. We shall seduce them in your schools, in your dormitories, in your gymnasiums, in your locker rooms, in your sports arenas, in your seminaries, in your youth groups, in your army bunkhouses, wherever men are with men together. Your sons shall become our minions and do our bidding. They will be recast in our image.

While this is just one activist, his mindset is highly instructive. I do not believe our children should be recast in his image, especially with Federal dollars. I do not appreciate this sort of attempt to recruit our children and grandchildren to this lifestyle.

Before Members vote, I urge them to survey the literature in front of me. I apologize in advance to Members who might be offended. Yes, some of it is graphic and offensive, but it is the same garbage being forced on our children.

Do not vote on this amendment without looking at this material for yourself. What this comes down to is whether or not Members think voters back home in their districts really approve of their hard-earned money being used to bombard their children with prohomosexual propaganda that directly contradicts their values.

If you think your taxpayers back home have a problem with this, then I ask for your support of this amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MRS. UNSOELD TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HANCOCK

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. UNSOELD to the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK:

In subsection (a) of the first amendment made to page 762, after "agency" strike "that received funds under this Act".

After "shall" insert "use funds made available under this Act to".

Add at the end of subsection (a) the following: No local educational agency shall use funds under this Act to distribute or to aid in the distribution by any organization of obscene material to minors on school grounds.

Add at the end of the first amendment made to page 762, after line 8, add the following:

"(c) NO FEDERAL CONTROL OF CURRICULUM.—Nothing in this section shall be construed—

"(1) to authorize an officer or employee of the Federal Government to mandate, direct, or control a State, local educational agency, or schools' instructional content, curriculum, and related activities;

"(2) to limit the application of the General Education Provisions Act;

"(3) to require the distribution of scientifically or medically false or inaccurate materials or to prohibit the distribution of scientifically or medically true or accurate materials;

"(4) to create any legally enforceable right.

"(d) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall not—

"(1) review any curricula or instructional materials;

"(2) promulgate regulations; or

"(3) take any administrative or legal action against a State or local educational agency or school.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to support my amendment to the Hancock amendment to H.R. 6.

The Hancock amendment once more would give the Federal Government jurisdiction over curriculum decisions. What with all of the discussion we have heard in this bill about no Federal mandates, it seems absolutely crazy to even consider giving the Federal Government this control.

My amendment clarifies that restrictions contained in the amendment apply only to funds provided under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and that it does not apply to the use of local funds. The amendment also clarifies that nothing in this section shall interfere with the rights of local communities to select curriculum appropriate to the needs of the children in their communities.

Decisions regarding curriculum choices are best left to local school officials and local elected school board members.

Education has always been a local matter. To change that now because of the gentleman from Missouri's, Mr. HANCOCK'S obsession or fear over prohomosexual propaganda is not only misplaced, it would be illegal.

The Hancock amendment violates a basic principle of the general Education Provisions Act and the Department of Education Organization Act that states that the Federal Government cannot exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the curriculum or program of instruction of any educational institution.

The amendment's definition of program or activity in the Hancock amendment is so broad that classroom discussions, library acquisitions, and even private conversations in counseling sessions would be subject to censorship under the threat of loss of all Federal funding.

Furthermore, we have just in this body passed lobbyist reform legislation. We have said in response to the American public there is too much influence by lobbyists on the legislative process, and yet outside this Chamber's doors material is being distributed to warn, is this coercion or blackmail, to warn Members that a vote for the Unsoeld amendment will be scored in voters' guides as a vote to promote homosexuality. Never mind what the facts are. These people will use it to score. Is that not undue influence by lobbying groups and in total violation to what this body did a very short time ago by more than a two-thirds vote?

The Hancock amendment would set an extremely dangerous precedent for Federal mandating and policing of local education programs. I urge my colleagues to keep local control of local moneys and local schools with the folks back home who know best what is going on in their communities, what the needs are in their schools, and not to impose the Federal Government, big brother, into local schools.

I urge adoption of the Unsoeld amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the Unsoeld amendment—or what I will refer to as the "Unsoeld double-loophole" amendment—is a gutting amendment, pure and simple.

It is a desperate attempt to undermine my amendment completely. A vote for the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment is essentially a vote against the Hancock amendment to H.R. 6.

Indeed, a vote for the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment is a vote for allowing this kind of prohomosexual propaganda to continue unabated in our Nation's public schools.

Allow me to explain.

The Unsoeld amendment contains not one, but two separate and very clever loopholes which will allow any school in the country to use local, State, and Federal funds to blatantly promote and advocate the homosexual lifestyle to preschoolers, elementary school students, junior high students, and high school students.

The first loophole in the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment is that it restricts only the use of Federal funds.

In fact, the Unsoeld amendment explicitly affirms the right of schools to use other public resources to bombard our children and grandchildren with prohomosexual propaganda in the classroom.

This first loophole is a green light to local educational agencies to play the shell game we have come to know so well, where Federal grantees pour all the money in the same pot and somehow insist they didn't use Federal funds. As a result, there is absolutely no accountability regarding the use of Federal tax dollars.

That is loophole No. 1.

The second loophole in the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment is even more insidious.

The Hancock amendment targets those programs which have the purpose or effect of promoting the homosexual lifestyle. The Unsoeld double-loophole amendment changes that.

The Unsoeld amendment only targets those programs which have the purpose of promoting homosexual lifestyle.

Now, what does this mean? It means any school can simply misrepresent the purpose of their program—much as the New York State Board of Education did with this literature which is making the rounds of the Chamber. They claimed it was AIDS education.

All of these programs are instituted under the guise of something other than promoting the homosexual lifestyle. Whether they pass it off as cultural sensitivity training, sex education, or AIDS awareness, the campaign to promote homosexuality as healthy, normal and desirable will continue.

In fact, the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment would allow schools to use even Federal funds to promote the homosexual lifestyle—that's right, even Federal funds. All the school has to do is misrepresent or lie about the purpose of the program.

So you see, the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment covers every base to make it nearly impossible to prevent public resources of any kind from being used to bombard our children and grandchildren with graphic, pro-homosexual propaganda.

What about the mandate argument raised by Mrs. UNSOELD and other opponents of this amendment? My colleagues this is nothing but a red herring.

While I am gratified my liberal colleagues have suddenly gotten religion on the subject of local autonomy and the need to restrain Big Brother government, let's be honest about this so-called mandate issue.

H.R. 6 itself contains no less than 23 specific, new unfunded mandates—not counting the amendments we have added to it on this floor. I have a list of them right here, prepared by the Congressional Research Service at the request of the Unfunded Mandates Caucus.

The mandate issue is no excuse to oppose the Hancock amendment. If you vote against the Hancock amendment on that basis, you better be prepared to vote against H.R. 6.

But for the record, the Hancock amendment is not an unfunded mandate. It does not impose any new expense or burden on schools or States as an unfunded mandate would. Schools and States are not required to make any additional reports or certifications to the Federal Government. They are not required to implement any new program or activity as a normal mandate would.

The Hancock amendment simply restricts schools which choose to accept

Federal funds under this act from pursuing one particular type of activity, promoting a homosexual lifestyle.

Why not have such a restriction? We are not in the business of writing blank checks here in the Congress. As Members of Congress we have a fiduciary responsibility regarding the use of Federal tax dollars whether by an agency or a grantee such as a local school, and the only way to effectively prevent the use of Federal tax dollars to promote the homosexual lifestyle is the Hancock amendment.

My friends, I do not think you are going to escape this issue. You are going on record here; profamily groups across the country are watching this vote, which I will agree with my colleague, the public is going to know about this vote.

Ask yourself a basic question: Do the taxpayers of your district really want their hard-earned tax dollars and our Nation's public schools used to bombard their children with homosexual propaganda? Of course not. They will not be patient with more double talk coming out of the U.S. Congress.

The Unsoeld double loophole is no shield either.

I urge my colleagues, for the sake of what is right and decent, for the sake of the children of this country, to oppose and defeat the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment and support the Hancock amendment to H.R. 6.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

My colleague on the other side of the aisle, sponsor of the amendment, referred to unfunded mandates. That was not in any of my statement.

I would like to suggest that if the Hancock amendment is intended to get at some of the literature or material that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] referred to, I would point out that the board of education's chancellor in New York has repudiated the use of such material, and it will be talked about by another Member on this side.

But I would point out to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] that if his objective is to not have this kind of material in any way distributed at some kind of school-sponsored program, he should read my amendment, which states:

> No local educational agency shall use funds under this act to distribute or to aid in the distribution by any organization of obscene material to minors on school grounds.

Now, I believe that that takes care of this issue.

I would also like the gentleman to read his own definition in his amendment which says that a program or activity for purposes of this section which should be prohibited includes the distribution of instructional materials, instruction, counseling, or other services on school grounds or referral.

So under your definition of what would be prohibited would be a referral of a pupil to an organization that affirms or discusses a homosexual lifestyle, even in the context of providing health care. That kind of Big Brother dictatorship from the Federal Government to local schools, to local communities, in my view, is not acceptable. It is not the American way of doing things.

Local decisions should be made by local people where they know best the problems and how to solve them.

I would submit that, rather than being a loophole, my amendment probably accomplishes what the gentleman was intending in his own amendment, and really he should support it.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] in a colloquy if he would agree.

Did I understand the gentleman in his opening remarks to say that there is literature that has been and is being distributed in public schools in this country that the Parliamentarian has determined is not fit for the eyes of Congress?

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HANCOCK. That is exactly right.

Mr. EMERSON. So this is another example of where we are willing to exempt ourselves, as it were, from some laws and regulations, yet have other entities in our population be exposed to them?

Mr. HANCOCK. If the gentleman will yield further for just a moment, in fact, the Unsoeld double-loophole amendment was changed from the time we started. We just got it in which she added the words that we did not even know about, obscene material. I think we have a problem with the definition of "obscene."

I am assuming that when I handed her this literature a few days ago that she agrees this is obscene material. We also have a few books here which I did not give her which are being used which you are welcome to come over and look at, and so they have corrected or at least changed, and we are getting into the problem of defining "obscene materials"; but these materials have been used and are being used in public education in lots of areas in the United States.

Mr. EMERSON. I would like to make one further point: The gentlewoman was critical of the fact that there are certain interest groups in this country who are seeking to inform Congress and the American public about their perspective on this issue, and they are going to tell people who belong to their organization how Members vote on this issue.

I have always understood that citizen communication or interest-group communication with Congress was protected under the first amendment, and people had the right to make expressions. The gentlewoman acted in such horror that there were people in the corridors out here who were expressing a point of view.

Have you ever come through those doors when there was not someone out there expressing a particular point of view?

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I just had a very simple question. Some materials have been handed out around this Chamber that are on the desk here that were allegedly distributed to schoolchildren. Now, aside from the one incident in New York where the Gay Men's Health Crisis has said that material meant for adults was by mistake left on a table outside a high school conference, can you cite chapter and verse as to where this has been distributed to children?

Mr. HANCOCK. If the gentleman will yield, we have lots of materials: Staples High School, Westport, CT; California, Unified School District, San Francisco; at Pehoa in Hawaii, a high school; the Rainbow Curriculum, and that is in the New York public schools; New Hampshire public schools; Fairfax County in Virginia, under family life education. Yes, we can cite where this is being done.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I yield briefly to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NADLER].

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, very briefly, my information, first of all, in New York, this material has never been distributed as part of the Rainbow Coalition in the New York City public schools. I do not know about the other high schools. But I do know that with the exception of the one mistake where this was put out at a high school citywide conference on a table, the authors say this has never been and never was mean to be and was never distributed to any schools, because it is meant for adults. I know that your reference to the New York City public schools is plainly mistaken.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I am happy to yield to the gentlewoman from Washington.

Mrs. UNSOELD. I believe it is highly appropriate for people outside the doors or anyplace to be expressing their view. What I take exception to is the threat that a vote is about to be scored, and then he list of the organizations for which that scoring has been done, and I do not think that is appropriate.

Mr. EMERSON. If I may say to the gentlewoman, every day the AFL-CIO and the Chamber of Commerce, the NAM and the NRA, and I am sure any number of interest groups in this country rate our votes according to their perspective, and I would suggest there is absolutely nothing inappropriate about that. It is clearly a matter of expression protected, I think not only by the first amendment, but under other provisions of the Constitution, and about the rights of citizens.

Mrs. UNSOELD. But a threat prior to the vote is probably exactly the kind of lobbyist influence to which the public objects and to which we should try to rise above as a legislative body representing those people.

Mr. EMERSON. I fail to understand how we can represent our constituencies if they are not to communicate with us, and certain organizations which their own membership.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on this amendment, but I sat in my office and watched it, and I decided that somebody needs to come over here and talk about kids.

The fastest growing number of kids in this country, or the fastest growing number of people who are contracting AIDS are young people. It is happening across the board. It does not make any difference whether you are in a rich community or a poor community or people of color or anything else, it is all over the country.

In my State, when I was in the State legislature, I put in the first education money, back in 1984, in order to make money available to the education system, and in 1988 the State of Washington passed a law requiring AIDS education in all the schools and appropriated $8 million of their own money to do it. I find it extraordinarily ironical that folks who are usually up on their feet telling us that the Federal Government ought to stay out of their business and that the beltway does not know everything, are suddenly going to leap in on school districts and decide what ought to happen.

Now, I am not going to defend what happened in every school district across this country, but I will defend the right of the 280-some school districts in the State of Washington to be able to decide what is an appropriate curriculum for their people. And I think for us to be putting in language that decides for them, the language of Mrs. UNSOELD's amendment—"No educational agency shall use funds under this act to distribute or aid in the distribution by any organization of obscene material"—is about as clear-cut as you need. And for us to then decide what obscenity is and for us to get down into that kind of stuff is simply the Federal Government taking away the right of local school districts to decide how to educate their kids.

There may be a problem in some district in the United States, but for us to legislate on the basis of what went on in some in 6 or 3 or 2 districts across the country is simply an invasion by the Federal Government, in a way, on this issue, the most personal of private behavior that we are trying to get kids to change and understand what they are doing, is in my opinion absolutely the wrong way to go.

I expect that in Chewelah, WA they are going to educate their kids a little bit differently than in Rolla, MO, or in Charleston, SC or in a whole lot of other places. And I will trust the school board and I will trust the community to make those kinds of educational decisions for their people.

For us not to have our communities involved in educating their kids is a serious mistake. And if something happens, they can correct that. That is not damage beyond belief. But for us in any way to stand between our school districts and telling their kids about how you contract AIDS, what it is about and what happens and what the end result of it is, simply not good policy.

Mrs. UNSOELD's amendment is sufficient in this regard, and I do not think you need to be delving any further into telling them.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HANCOCK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am assuming the gentleman is voting against H.R. 6 because of the 23 other mandates in H.R. 6. Is that correct?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The Federal Government puts out money to aid education. We allow States to use it in a whole lot of ways, and I think there are things in the cities that we have done to support that.

Mr. HANCOCK. But we do make mandates, you will assume.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, but I am not going to tell them how to run the program or what the actual educational material is going to be.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Washington yield to me?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the gentleman from Missouri he may think they are Federal mandates, but, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] pointed out the other day, he made it very clear that there are no Federal mandates in this bill. There are no Federal mandates in this bill. There are 23 reporting requirements, and those reporting requirements can be paid for with Federal dollars, not State or local dollars, but Federal dollars.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] yield for a colloquy? I tried to get the gentleman when he introduced his amendment, and he had yielded back his time already.

I want to go through the same discussion with the gentleman from Missouri, in good faith, that I went through with the gentleman from California [Mr. DOOLITTLE], yesterday.

First and foremost, what does the gentleman mean by program or activity?

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HANCOCK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the program or activity is defined as an activity with the purpose or effect of encouraging or supporting homosexuality as a positive lifestyle. That, I think, is pretty explicit. I have no objection——

Mr. GUNDERSON. Let me give the gentleman some examples. It is very important that we understand what we are or are not doing here.

Will counseling in school between a certified school counselor and a student on that student's struggle for personal identity be considered a program or activity under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK. Counseling them for the purpose of the counseling which we have here of homosexuality as a positive, affirmative lifestyle, yes, I think that would be prohibited.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Let me take that one further. There is a recent study out, I think it was actually a study by the Department of Health and Human Services under the Bush administration, a 1989 report of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, a task force on youth suicide, which found that "homosexuals were 2 times to 7 times more likely than heterosexuals to attempt suicide."

Now, that happened under the Bush administration. What happens if a kid is found in a lunchroom or a restroom attempting suicide and is discovered and they take that to the high school counselor and the counselor says, "Let's talk," and the kid says, "I think I am a homosexual"? Can that counselor respond in a way that encourages that person, to accept themselves as a person to accept themselves as a human being? That will have the effect of, quote unquote, promoting homosexuality?

Mr. HANCOCK. I believe, under those circumstances the gentleman describes, the proper position for a school official would be to refer that student to an individual with the credentials that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. McDERMOTT] has, to be counseled.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Would the gentleman say under his amendment no school guidance counselor in America would be able to counsel a student, boy or girl, who came to them and said, "I am really struggling with who I am"?

Mr. HANCOCK. I think they could counsel them. I question whether we have very many people in public education who are qualified to counsel on this particular subject. I do not know that that is a requirement for teaching.

Mr. GUNDERSON. None of us wanted to get into teacher certification.

Mr. HANCOCK. But we can counsel, and the proper thing to do, if an individual should recognize that they are not qualified to counsel in this field, they should refer them to the proper qualified counsel.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, of course a young man who has an ambivalence ought to be counseled. He needs attention, care. But what this amendment proscribes is encouraging or supporting homosexual lifestyle, and that is different from giving advice and counseling.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Here is the problem I have with the amendment: I do not know about anybody else, but it has the effect of—if you drop the words "has the effect of" from his amendment, then I think what the gentleman from Illinois is suggesting is clearly palatable.

You see, where I am trying to get the gentleman, I hope there is not a person in America who supports an academic course in our public or private schools promoting homosexuality.

I do not support that, but what I am trying to deal with is an amendment that goes beyond what I think is that legitimate intention to some very destructive effects. No. 1 is dealing with counseling. The second one I want to get to is the issue of education.

I say to the gentleman, "I mean your amendment says that any school that receives funds under this act cannot use any funds that has the effect of promoting homosexuality under any program or activity. I would assume by that you mean then that AIDS education is no longer allowed activity in any public school in America if your amendment passes."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman, "Can you respond? I'm just trying to find out. I think, as I tried to discuss with you some time ago, I think a discussion can lead us to a consensus in this amendment that gets where you want to go that doesn't have the negative effect that I feel."

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I just again revert to the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK]. It says, "* * * shall implement or carry out a program or activity that has either the purpose," and I know the words that trouble the gentleman, "or effect of encouraging or supporting homosexuality as a positive lifestyle alternative."

I think that fits what the gentleman himself has said is not——

Mr. GUNDERSON. So the gentleman does not believe then that, if this amendment is adopted, that AIDS education will in any way be limited?

Mr. HYDE. Not at all. I would hope it would not be, and I would hope that young people struggling with their own identity could get counseling under this amendment so long as the life style of homosexuality is not encouraged. That does not mean it has to be misunderstood, or condemned, or judgmental, but just not to promote, encourage, it as a positive lifestyle.

Mr. GUNDERSON. OK; question No. 3:

What's the enforcement effect of your amendment? I mean we discussed this yesterday with the Doolittle amendment as well. Let's assume a school is found to have violated your amendment. What's the penalty?

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUNDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, since the question was brought up yesterday we did a little research, and we found that the Department of Education, when they receive applications for Federal funds from schools, that the schools swear to uphold the laws under this—under the——

Mr. GUNDERSON. Do they have to sign a report ahead of time proving they are not doing any thing of this sort?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is correct, and they also have to uphold the rules and regulations, the mandates, if you want to call it that, the other 23 of the Department of Education. So, those funds could be removed, if in fact—if they did not abide by the law.

Mr. GUNDERSON. OK; let me further ask the gentleman another question, and I regret this is taking a lot of time, but the Reagan AIDS Commission listed three recommendations regarding education on AIDS in the school system. One of them required States' boards of education should mandate that an HIV education curriculum be developed that is student AIDS sensitive; a recommendation was that local school boards should do the same thing, and the third recommendation was that school boards and parents should develop a means to incorporate values emphasizing personal responsibility. How would those recommendations of the Reagan AIDS Commission be affected by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HANCOCK. Were those recommendations made to promote—to encourage and support homosexuality as an alternative lifestyle? I do not think so.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Well, does it have the effect of—

Mr. HANCOCK. No, in fact I think it is just the other way around. I think that AIDS education, properly presented for what it is, but not the type of literature that is being used in our public schools now, this document here—

Mr. GUNDERSON. OK. It is my time, and I am running out of time, and the gentleman is getting off the subject. Answer a question: Would you agree to a unanimous consent request to delete the words "or has the effect of"?

Mr. HANCOCK. No.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Why not?

Mr. HANCOCK. Because there again it is part of the Unsoeld—

Mr. GUNDERSON. This has got nothing to do with the Unsoeld amendment. I am talking about the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK. The Unsoeld amendment does do the same thing the gentleman is asking me to do, and, no, I would agree because that opens up the door for them to say, "Well, we didn't intend for this to be this way. We didn't intend." It opens up the door for them to get around it by misrepresentation—

Mr. GUNDERSON. All right; I reclaim my time because I think my colleagues see the problem. No matter how good the intentions might be verbally, the problem is, if we adopt the Hancock amendment by itself, it has the effect of prohibiting school counseling and guidance, it has the effect of prohibiting AIDS education.

Now I put myself second to none in, quote, unquote, advocating Christian values around here, and I am aware of the flyer that is here. But I am going to plead with all my colleagues on this amendment to have the courage of their convictions and to recognize that as of January of this year 63,000 young people between the ages of 20 to 29, and most medical people say that means every one of those 63,000 was infected with AIDS while they were teenagers, and I ask my colleagues simply: How many kids do we have to kill before we have the courage to stand up and say it's time to educate them and to do what is right, not what is politically popular at that moment?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] for his words. He is stepping right up to the plate on this issue. But there is something more important at stake here.

We are not entertaining the country by one series of amendments after another that do not rise to the intellectual level of scatological jokes exchanged by naughty little boys in the boys' room in a grade school, and that is what this debate, and the debate that we have been having on a lot of these other issues, has become.

I say to my colleagues, Now you want to talk about homosexuality; you don't have guts enough to talk straight. Now I'm telling you to your face to quit dancing around with it and say what it is that you don't want to have happen. Your amendment is so poorly written that the case in New York that you're complaining about isn't covered by the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the March 23 New York Times has a description of what happened in that case. The Hancock amendment does not do anything.

I will tell my colleague something else: Maybe we are lucky that you don't know any more about education legislation than you do. There is no enforcement in your legislation. On the other hand, the gentlelady's amendment to your amendment, which I don't like, does make an enforceable prohibition. There is a way to enforce it.

My colleagues, go ahead and pass this, and I say, If you think that scatological jokes in a boys' room raise the intellectual level of a grade school any place in this country, or lower it, then you vote for the Hancock amendment because it will have just as much impact on the intellectual content of education in this country, and if you don't like what they are doing in New York in their schools, why don't you move to New York and run for the school board?

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I was going to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS] because he was ahead of me, but please hang on, CLIFF, and allow me to say this:

My wife just called, mother of five, grandmother of nine, and she suggested I read some of the stuff from the pamphlets that they are distributing to young children in elementary schools.

I said,

> I'm already going to have a meeting with the Parliamentarian about something else. I can't read that filthy, pornographic material on national television. I can't do that, Sally. We have got a decorum in this Chamber, and it may be the last sane place in this Nation 20 or 30 years from now when our moral standards have culturally melted down to the standards of Sodom and Gomorrah.

I say to my colleagues,

> Look, I was born in Manhattan, and I was raised in Beverly Hills from 10 to 19, when I went in the Air Force, and those two communities have a particular penchant for poisoning little Dorothy's in Kansas, or Iowa, or other parts of this country.

Now the last Republican——

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to withdraw his comment about the State of New York or Manhattan, his comment about my district poisoning the rest of the country.

Mr. DORNAN. Ridiculous. Teach him parliamentary procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot rise to a question of personal privilege at this point.

☐ 1630

Mr. DORNAN. Now, the last gentleman——

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I think this conversation is out of order and has no place here.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, take down the gentleman's words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan demands the words to be taken down.

Mr. DORNAN. Take them down. I will wait.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the gentleman's words.

☐ 1640

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my words.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, do I not control the time now?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. I think the words should be taken down, and he should be silenced in this Chamber.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary ruling already occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee has already agreed by unanimous consent to allow the gentleman to withdraw his words.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am standing on my feet trying to deal with the Members around me. I object to the unanimous-consent request and insist that the gentleman's words be read and he be silenced for the rest of this debate.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, it is my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's objection is untimely.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] may proceed in order.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, when I look at this material on the desk, as a grandfather and as a father who is very lucky to have five children, it puts me in a fighting mood. This is material promoting and encouraging what a majority of people in this country consider grievous sin. There is a Federal role when our society is degenerating, when our culture is literally melting down, when we live in a country where the whole world points at us and refers to our child pornography, our drive-by shootings, our gangs and carjackings, where people are pulled out of cars by teenagers and beaten sometimes to death.

Our culture is melting down. This is one of the root causes, trying to sell sodomy as a healthy lifestyle.

Now, I notice that the distinguished, wonderful gentlewoman from the great State of Washington said that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] was obsessed with this issue. The word "homophobe" never appeared in that dictionary until a new edition was put in here 2 years ago. In my first 15 years around here, there was no such word. Why is it that people are insulted when we stand up here in disgust of the moral degeneration of our country and want to defend traditional family values? I am tired of this. I am tired of this kind of a debate where I pick up a book not fit for the eyes of adults with its obscene language and X-rated pictures and a cover designed for children.

I notice that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is here. Here they are claiming, as homosexual people in history, Alexander the Great, Susan B. Anthony, where it says she probably had a sexual relationship with her lifelong friend Anna Dickinson, St. Augustin, for Lord's sake. It goes on, Lord Byron, Julius Caesar, Frederick the Great, that follows one of the Members of this House. Anne Frank, the little 13-year-old girl in that attic in Holland, what an obscenity. It goes on and on. Of course, Langston Hughes, John Maynard Keynes. Then they throw in some people out of themselves, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, grab anybody, Eleanor Roosevelt, Richard the Lionhearted. This is destructive to the educational system of our wonderful country. I hope this vote is rated. I will go on national radio and speak about why this vote is important and should be rated.

I think that one of the gentleman over there, the chairman, was hurling insults at my friend from Missouri right and left, suggesting he was ignorant on his amendment and did not know what he was doing. That it was lousy written legislation.

I was tempted to take down his words. I am glad I did not.

As far as my words are taken down, I will take that up with the gentleman that I referred to earlier, because he has criticized me in his press.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the Hancock amendment and the amendments pending thereto end in 10 minutes. That would give both sides a way to conclude their arguments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. When I was in high school, I was a member of the debating team. The national debate topic one year was whether the Federal Government should provide aid to education. The chief conservative argument in all the debates against Federal aid to education was that along with Federal aid would come Federal control.

The liberal reply was that one did not follow the other. The Federal Government could restrain itself. The Congress could restrain itself from attempting to control, from attempting to dictate to local school districts.

Now look at this amendment. It would mandate a cutoff of all Federal funds to any school district that uses certain instructional materials of which some Members in this Chamber disapprove. Why should we attempt to seize control of classrooms, across the Nation? Why should we dictate the preferences of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] to the local school districts, which are a lot closer to local citizens that we are?

Do we not believe in local control of education, or are we in favor of local control only when local school officials agree with us and with our prejudices? What a policy. What an amendment.

The purpose of this amendment allegedly is to discourage proselytization of homosexuality.

The effect of this amendment is much different. It would leave our teachers bound and gagged, afraid to speak of anything which might cause offense to the most bigoted and ignorant in the local community. This amendment turns our most fundamental values on their head.

In considering this amendment, we are faced with a number of choices. Do we want to encourage the kind of behavior we saw in this House a few minutes ago? Are we going to teach children tolerance, or are we going to teach them to be intolerant toward those who may be different from us? Are we going to teach our children that open debate and understanding are worthy values in a free society, or are we going to teach them censorship and ignorance? Because if we vote for the Hancock amendment, we choose for our children censorship, ignorance, and intolerance. This amendment would impose a Federal mandate on every teacher in America to the effect that if the mere existence of gay men and lesbian women is mentioned at all, it must be in a negative light.

Why should we impose a curriculum of hate on every classroom in every community on this Nation? Who would judge just what curriculum materials have the effect of encouraging homosexuality and by what standards would they judge? How could local school districts know that would violate this amendment and bring down upon them the draconian penalty of a cutoff of all Federal funds?

And what about the AIDS education, education about safe sex? Are we to prohibit it?

The fact is there are gay boys and lesbian girls in our schools. That is a fact. Nothing that we say in this Chamber will alter that fact. The question is how to relate to it. How to relate to the fact that these boys and girls are at a greater risk of AIDS than most others in our society. How to prevent them from contracting AIDS. How to teach the facts about AIDS in a socially acceptable context.

These are questions that local school officials must wrestle with and that we are telling them, "Don't deal with, be careful with how you deal with it, because we will cut off all your aid to education."

It is misinformation, lack of understanding and intolerance that leads to this amendment. This amendment would mandate either that no mention ever be made in school of the existence of gay men and lesbians except in the language of fear, ignorance, and hate.

Let us not decide today that this is what we want to teach our children. Let us reject, let us reject this terrible amendment.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that if everybody in the United States, every parent, every person in the United States could see this literature, I think he would find that 98 percent of the people would come into the category that the gentleman mentioned of being bigoted and ignorant.

Frankly, I resent a little bit, the gentleman complained about his State of New York, I resent a little bit the gentleman calling the people in my district bigoted and ignorant, because they do not want this in their schools.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to tone down the debate here and see that we talk about some of the facts. As any piece of legislation, everybody reads it differently.

I am sure the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD] has promoted an amendment here that she believes honestly clarifies, I think might be the word, the Hancock amendment. But let me read what she is saying in her amendment.

She is adding this to the Hancock amendment. "No local educational agency shall use funds under this Act to distribute or to aid in the distribution by any organization of obscene material to minors on school grounds."

I have here a book. It is called "Daddy's Roommate." This is not obscene literature.

Let me ask the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD], "Heather has two mommies." One teenager in 10, and I would be glad to yield to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD], if this is considered literature that would be allowed under her amendment to be distributed?

☐ 1650

Mrs. UNSOELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEARNS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Washington.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, that is a local school and locally elected school board's decision, not the Federal Government's.

Mr. STEARNS. I understand what the gentlewoman is saying, but I think that is the crux of this whole debate, what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] is saying.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Keeping Big Brother out of the high schools.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, we have used that argument, and I have heard it so many times. I understand why the gentlewoman is using it on her side.

This is the crux of the question, shall we allow the distribution of this material in our schools or not? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] believes that we should not, and obviously, the literature that he has cited over here, which is obscene, I think the gentlewoman would agree, the other literature he mentioned which is on the table, that many of us can hardly open, is obscene.

Under the gentlewoman's amendment, as I understand it, she is saying that literature could not be distributed?

Mrs. UNSOELD. If the gentleman will continue to yield, under the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] that literature would not be prohibited.

Mr. STEARNS. The gentlewoman is saying that literature could be circulated?

Mrs. UNSOELD. I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that the way his amendment is worded, it did not apply to that literature and its distribution.

Mr. STEARNS. In conclusion, let me just say I think we have a fundamental difference between what the gentlewoman is trying to do and what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] is trying to do.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hancock amendment to prevent parents from being forced to subsidize the teaching of values that run directly counter to those they strive to teach their children, and against the Unsoeld amendment, which would attempt to distort the intentions of what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] is trying to do.

He is simply trying to say, "Let us not subsidize the distribution of material," not only like what I have in my hand, but obviously some of the material over there which is really destructive.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEARNS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to correct this. One of the gentleman on our side mentioned the HHS study. That was thrown out by Dr. Louis Sullivan, the Secretary of HHS, as being wrongheaded and bigoted, particularly bigoted against the Catholic Church, which the report accused of causing teenage suicide, in fact.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEARNS. I do not have much time. As I get near the end, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to clear up the charge that was just made.

Mr. STEARNS. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] knows how much I respect him, and I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out that just because the whole study was rejected does not mean a particular statistic in that study was rejected.

Mr. STEARNS. I appreciate the gentleman's comment.

In my way of thinking. Mr. Chairman, particularly across the United States, what we see here in these books and what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] has mentioned, the number of schools distributing this, it is used in the public schools to promote an agenda which is contrary to what many Americans believe. I could quote at length examples of homosexual groups who want to provide details of the gay lifestyle to our schools, but instead, I just want to concentrate on saying that our children need to be learning reading, writing, and arithmetic, studying foreign languages, world cultures and the sciences, and our children need to learn history, geography, and economics.

How can we even be thinking about wasting their valuable time on teaching and distributing materials like this? It simply has no place in our schools. We have just been through a lengthy debate over how much we should protect the very limited right to constitutionally protected prayer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. STEARNS, was given permission to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, we know, however, that promoting values that are shared by mainstream Americans, such as the Ten Commandments or the Golden Rule, cannot even be done in our public schools, yet we are distributing material like this.

At the local level, some are making every effort to force the homosexual agenda into the normal school curriculum, it seems clear to me, particularly in light of the constitutional prayer amendment that we talked about earlier.

Therefore, I ask my colleagues to support real education on real academic subjects, and urge my colleagues to vote yes on the Hancock amendment, and no on the Unsoeld substitute.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to join the Republican mayors of Los Angeles and New York, Mr. Reardon and Mr. Giuliani, in opposing this amendment. The Hancock amendment would cut off all Federal aid to the schools of New York, presided over by Rudy Giuliani, whose office authorized the statement of his opposition. It would cut off all aid to the schools of Los Angeles. Do the Members know why? Because those schools have tried, and two Republican mayors of those cities have continued to try, to respond to some of the unhappiest children in America.

I am struck by this debate about promoting homosexuality. I have to tell the Members, and I think I have had as much experience about it as almost anybody in here, if you paid me to promote homosexuality, I do not know what I would do. How do you promote homosexuality? What do people think it is, a rock concert? A prize fight? How do you promote homosexuality? What shallowness of understanding of basic human nature leads Members to talk about promoting homosexuality, encouraging homosexuality? What do they think it is, a taste for food?

In fact, people in New York and in Los Angeles and in other schools who understand human nature and understand human sexuality know that there are 15- and 16- and 17- and 18-year-old children who are tortured by feelings they cannot control in a society that condemns them. They have reached out to those children. They have established schools that say to those kids, "You are not worthless," that would not subject those children to the kind of treatment that one of the Members sought to subject another Member to on the floor. That is the kind of insensitivity and bullying that exists. We know that.

Yes, I suppose if we have a 16- or a 17-year-old whose feelings are homosexual and cannot turn them off, like a water faucet, despite the shallowness of the understanding that some people in here have of human nature, if we take that kid who has been abused and who has been picked on and put him in a more supportive environment, then we lose our money. How do we dare support that kid? How dare we tall her she is not worthless? How dare we try to say that the person should not be discouraged from going on with their life? That is what we are talking about.

The literature that is being given out, and some Members here have more interest in it than I do, that literature, if it is the literature talked about in New York by the Gay Men's Health Crisis, was rejected by the chancellor. That is why it is irrelevant to the gentleman's amendment. The chancellor of the schools in New York, Mr. Cortines, said that literature is no good. That was not in there by the schools. The schools repudiated it.

What they do have in New York, in Los Angeles, under Republican mayors, in San Francisco, is an effort to reach out. Let me say to the Members, I think most Members understand that this kind of attempted imposition on people who are trying to help young people is not good public policy.

People worry about the politics. We all understand politics. Nobody parachuted in here totally pure. However, may I please entreat my colleagues, do not torture children. No vote is worth that. No vote is worth adding to the pain of these teenagers. Please vote against the Hancock amendment.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK]. I know it is late in the afternoon, and I will not take my full time, but I do want to say this, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] is one of the finest, and I might add, one of the kindest Members of this body, and I salute him for the work that he has done in this regard.

Mr. Chairman, the people of this Nation want our schools to emphasize the basics, and to do a better job in teaching core academic subjects, the point that was made so eloquently by my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS] just a few moments ago.

They do not want our schools to go to some of the extremes and tangents we have seen in some of the materials which schools have distributed and which they would be prohibited from distributing under the Hancock amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I might just read a quote that was written last year in Newsweek magazine by Joy Overbeck, a very liberal playwright and columnist, and she was writing about another topic, but it really relates to what we are talking about here today.

Writing of her sadness at the revealing clothes her 10-year-old daughter felt peer pressure to wear, Ms. Overbeck said this:

> It's not really that I want her to be a little girl forever. It's just that it would be nice if she were a child during her childhood. Instead, she has been bathed in the fantasy of bodies and beauty that marinates our entire culture. The result is an insidious form of premature sexual awakening that is stealing our kids' youth.

Mr. Chairman, that is why so many parents in New York City rebelled when the schools up there started to distribute the books "Heather Has Two Mommies" and "Daddy's Roommate." This is what we are talking about, education of small children.

There is tremendous competition for Government dollars today. We are having trouble coming up with enough money even for programs about which there is great consensus. The overwhelming majority of the American people do not want tax dollars spent to encourage or support homosexuality. Even my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] agreed that he did not want that, either. Nothing in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] prohibits anyone from being a homosexual or having any type of homosexual activity. It simply gives our schools some very needed direction.

To hear some of the most liberal Members of this body say that they are just trying to keep Big Brother out of our schools has the most hollow ring to it of anything I have ever heard said. I might say, in response to what the last speaker said, you promote homosexuality by handing out pamphlets and books telling impressionable young people that homosexuality is a positive and healthy lifestyle. That is the very thing that would be prohibited by this amendment. I urge its support.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN] thinks that teenagers decide on their sexual activity and their basic sexual urges from reading pamphlets, he is a poor guide, indeed, to public policy dealing with young people.

□ 1700

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, in the 20 years I have been in the House, somehow we have visited afternoon like this from time to time when the House has the incredible ability to be so narrow-minded and so shallow in its thinking, and to be so mean in its spirit. This amendment is not about those materials that fascinate the gentleman at the other table. This amendment is not about whatever the title of the book is, "Heather's Other Mommy," or somebody's roommate. This is not what this is about.

This is about using those materials as a pretext to punish and to ostracize a class of people in this country, and to deny them the ability to make the same decisions that we want all of our children and each one of us to make about our futures, about our lives, about our sexuality, about our identity, about our crises.

For 10 years this House was nice enough to make me the chairman of the Committee on Children, Youth, and Families. For a long time it was only going to be the Committee on Children and Families, because people here did not want it to carry the title "youth," because youth scare the living hell out of us, adolescence scares us. Fortunately, at that time, the Catholic Church came forward and said they could not support the creation of this committee if it did not include young people, because young people are some of the most troubled and some of the most vulnerable and some of the most at-risk people in our society. They take special care, special nurturing, and we need to pay attention to them.

In those 10 years and today after the end of that committee, I have continued to spend an inordinate amount of time with young people in the public schools and other schools of my district, talking to them about themselves, and about our society, and about their chances to confront it, and their fears, and their hopes and their aspirations. And I think that all of us try to do that with our own children. And we certainly all know our neighbors, our friends, the chairmen of our finance committees, our donors, the people we come across in our daily lives tell us a whole series of stories about their children. They tell us about their children that are happy and wonderful, they tell us about their children who are sad, the children that cannot make it in college that are thinking about dropping out of school. They tell us about all of those children. They tell us about their children who are gay or lesbian, and we tell them we understand.

But somehow on the floor of this Congress, we do not permit ourselves to say to this Nation we understand. Instead, what we do is to seek to strike out in the meanest possible way when these young people are the most vulnerable, to deny them the information, the counseling that may be necessary. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] had it about right. If the counselor said to the young person who was thinking of suicide, and tragically we know there are some young people who are gay who have not only thought about suicide, but in fact have committed suicide, if the young person said to the counselor, "What should I do," and if the counselor suggested go on living, that would have the effect of promoting homosexuality under the Hancock amendment.

Are we really going to deny counselors, teachers, and others who encounter our children, and these are our children, our collective children, are we going to deny them the tools to say, "Choose life. Let us get you some additional counseling, some understanding, and let us put you together with professionals so that you can see the possibilities and the excitement of life over your despair at this moment, for whatever reason"? That cannot be the policy of the U.S. Congress, and it clearly cannot be the policy of this country.

I know it is new information to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] that before they put "homophobe" in the dictionary, there were some, and before they were listed in the book, and before the printing press, there were homosexuals and lesbians, before the printing press, before the telegraph, before the media, before the 20th century, before the 1960's there were homosexuals and lesbians. And we should not, we should not as a society seek to punish those individuals because they are in fact different from us. We must understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of California was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Every study of this problem that we have looked at in America says adolescents are the most vulnerable, they are the most at risk. As was pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], school districts did not endorse these materials. Richard Riordan is a wonderful superintendent of schools and asked that they be taken out, that the policy not allow them. This is not about those materials. It is about whether or not you can strike out at homosexuals, whether or not you can mug them, and batter them, and beat them on the floor of this Congress, because you cannot do it in the street, because it is illegal. That is what this is about, and the youngest and most vulnerable of those.

I would just hope that we would not accept this amendment. This amendment is in fact poorly drafted.

I am one who believes in mandates from the Federal Government to local school districts. But we in fact ought to do it when it is right, and we certainly ought to do it where it does not create this kind of harm. And I would hope that we would reject this amendment, if necessary accept the Unsoeld amendment, but clearly these are decisions for our constituents as families, as parents, as members of the school board, and as members of our community.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague from California has said on his side that he is protecting children, indicating we are not, and said we are denying them tools. Is this what the gentleman calls tools? We believe we are protecting children on this side. These are not tools.

Mr. MILLER of California. I would say to the gentleman I do not know if those are or are not, because I have not looked through all of that material. Let me just say again I have held up a whole range of materials, some which apparently people believe are obscene, some which people object to and all of that. The point is in fact that that is not official policy, and if it is, that is a matter I think really in terms of local school districts, that is a matter for parents whose children are going to those schools.

Mr. DORNAN. There is a common denominator. They all glorify and promote sodomy, fisting, anal sex, and homosexual conduct. And the gentleman says he is protecting the children.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that they do that.

Mr. DORNAN. Here it is. Look at it. The gentleman said he had never looked at it, and those who defend every level of pornography never look at the material.

Mr. MILLER of California. I am taking back my time, Mr. Chairman. This was not about that. The gentleman did not listen. This was not about defending materials. This was about stopping, stopping the kind of outrageous behavior that would be allowed under this amendment, and preventing school districts from carrying out their functions to try and help teachers and to take care of our young people. And I would hope that we would reject this amendment.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be ended after 3 minutes by the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] and 2 minutes by the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK], and then after that I would ask that there be one-half hour on all future amendments and amendments thereto, and 1 hour on the substitute and all amendments thereto, if it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, following the conclusion of the Unsoeld amendment, there may be consideration of another proposed amendment to the Hancock amendment. We would like to reserve the ability to debate that matter.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to amend that request to indicate the gentleman from California [Mr. BECERRA] would also have 3 minutes on this discussion before we end it, and that if the Unsoeld amendment would happen to be defeated, there would be a period of 5 minutes where they would have time to offer an amendment to the Hancock amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I think this is a reasonable compromise, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. INSLEE] agrees with that unanimous consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce, according to the Chair's understanding of this agreement, there will be 10 minutes of future debate on the Unsoeld amendment to the Hancock amendment. The time will be equally divided between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK], 5 minutes, and the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD], 5 minutes, and then that 3 of those minutes are reserved, 3 additional minutes reserved for the gentleman from California [Mr. BECERRA], is that correct?

Mr. GOODLING. That is correct, Mr. Chairman, on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment those are the ground rules.

Mr. GOODLING. Three minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA], 3 minutes for the gentleman from California [Mr. BECERRA], and 2 minutes for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK], to close the debate on this particular issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to rise to reiterate my support for the Unsoeld substitute amendment to the Hancock amendment. I have listened to this debate. I would like to point out that, as this body knows, I am a former educator. My husband and I have raised nine children. We have 10 grandchildren. And I am against the Hancock amendment because I do not think the Federal Government should interfere with the decisions that are made on a local level.

Students in different parts of the Nation have different needs. Educational issues should be addressed by the local level, by the people that we elect or we appoint. So says my school board in Montgomery County, MD, one of the best educational systems in the country. So says a whole group of organizations, such as the Child Welfare League of America, the National Association of Elementary School Principals, the National Network of Runaway and Youth Services, the National Council of Jewish Women, the American Association of School Administrators, the United States Conference of Mayors, and the American Public Health Association. They all believe, as I do, that local school boards should preserve the right to develop programs that conform to local community standards.

I would also point out, as has been mentioned, among the Conference of Mayors are two Republican mayors of very large cities. Rudolf Guiliani of New York City, and Richard Riordan of Los Angeles were mentioned. But I want to point out they said:

> The Hancock amendment would set an extremely dangerous precedent for Federal mandating and policing of local programs.

I also have concerns about the fact that there are administrative burdens that would be imposed upon the school systems that are there to educate in the basics. The Department of Education would have to issue regulations regarding the content of what should or should not be taught in the classroom, and all of our local school districts would have to examine their curricula and instructional materials to make sure that they do comply with these regulations set forth by the Department of Education.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of local school systems making the decisions about local school matters for all children.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the prior agreement, the gentleman from California [Mr. BECERRA] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Chairman, I have been here before, and what I am about to say I have said before, but I have said it about a different segment of the population. Normally when I take to this mike, it is to talk about immigrants, but if you were to just replace the word "immigrants" with the words of "young people" who are desperate for counseling and guidance and some attention, whether they are gay, lesbian, or not, then you have heard what I am going to say before.

This amendment, is portrayed as one thing, but if it were to pass, I guarantee it would do another.

Members, please, read the language of this amendment. See if you can define its separate provisions. See if you can come up with some definitions for what it says. See how it will rob our communities of their local control to decide for themselves how they will manage their local school affairs.

Notice the chilling effect it will have on schools and school districts that want to provide guidance and counseling. Watch how it will handcuff our schools that receive Federal funds that will be at risk, who will be afraid to receive Federal funds if this amendment passes.

And to Members of this body who represent large numbers of minorities, please, read this amendment closely, because it will be the Latino, the Asian American, the black American, the African-American communities that will suffer most from this amendment.

I urge those Members to look very closely at this language in this amendment.

I have been here before, and I have said this before. It pains me to have to say it over and over and over, but this amendment is not what it says it is. It is something much worse, whether it is intended as something bad or not, it makes no difference, because we are about to set policy by passing this amendment, should it pass, that we will regret.

I hope the Members will take the time to read the one or two simple paragraphs in this amendment and understand that this Hancock amendment should not pass whether or not it is well-intentioned.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] has 2 minutes remaining and is recognized.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, frankly, ladies and gentlemen, Members of the House, I had no idea when I came to the U.S. Congress 5 years ago that I would ever be called upon to discuss the subject, frankly, that we are discussing today except from the standpoint in private counseling with people that are concerned about it.

But when I see things like this, frankly, this is the first amendment I have ever offered on the House floor in the 5 years that I have been in the U.S. Congress. I am not comfortable. I have helped a lot of people do things. This made me so uncomfortable that I had to offer this amendment on the House floor, because I am a grandfather, I am a father.

Frankly, this type of stuff has no place in public education except from the standpoint of counseling people that do have a problem, and this amendment is not designed to keep that from happening. It has absolutely nothing to do with it.

But it does; it would prohibit from advocating this lifestyle as an acceptable alternative. I do not think of that as bigoted. I know people that are homosexual, and I have no problem with that as long as they do not advocate it, as long as they do not advocate it or promote it.

I am fully aware of what this amendment will do. It will return control, and it will tell people, "Look, look what the schools are doing."

Let us get involved in the education of our children. Let us go to the school board meetings. Let us see what is happening in our schools. And I think this forum is going to bring that out.

I would also say this: I certainly hope, in closing, I certainly hope that all of the rhetoric I have heard today about removing local control, that Government cannot control locally, all of the people, the liberals that have been doing it for the past 4 years, I hope they will read their comments later when it comes to some of the other votes that we are going to be doing throughout this session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] is recognized for such time as he may consume.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Hancock amendment.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to assure the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK], the maker of the amendment, that I have no question about his intent, but must seriously question the effect of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. INSLEE].

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I also agree that the drafter of this amendment, his intention is sincere, and many of us join you in your intent, but this amendment, if passed with this current language, is going to drive crazy a certain segment of our population, one of whom is my brother.

Let me tell you something about my brother that you may not know. He is a teacher. He is a teacher——

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, do I have the right to close, or does the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD] have the right to close?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Washington is offering the amendment to the amendment, and she has the right to close.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, my brother is a teacher. He has a stressful, tough job. We should not add to his job the worry that if a child comes to him and says, "Frank, Mr. Inslee, I may kill myself today because I am concerned about my sexual orientation," for this Congress to tell my brother to tell that child to go out in the hall and, "Get ye from the school yard," is not what I want this Congress to do.

I frankly do not think that is the intent of the drafter of this amendment. But that is what the language says.

And I speak for my father who was a biology teacher, and if someone raised his hand and said, "Mr. Inslee, is there a genetic component to sexual orientation," for him to have to worry about some bureaucrat disagreeing with him to lose school funding, that is wrong.

I urge you to support the Unsoeld amendment.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GOODLING. This is contrary to the unanimous consent that was requested. We are not going beyond the unanimous consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Washington has 5 minutes. She has yielded 1.

Mr. GOODLING. No; no. That was if this was defeated and there was a substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair divided the 10 minutes between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] and the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mr. GOODLING. But you only gave him 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The original request allotted 3 of the 5 minutes of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mr. GOODLING. No. I requested 3 minutes for the gentlewoman from Maryland, 3 minutes for the gentleman from California and 2 minutes to close for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK]. The additional time that we spoke about is if her amendment would happen to be defeated, then she would have an opportunity to offer another, and you were going to divide the 10 minutes at that particular time.

But now we are going beyond, and we will never get it stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair's understanding was that the gentleman requested 10 additional minutes equally divided, and then granted an additional 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BECERRA].

The Chair announced at the time that the time would be equally divided between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] and the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mr. GOODLING. We had a misunderstanding in communication.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets any misunderstanding.

Mr. GOODLING. The 10 minutes I meant was for the time that she may need to offer a substitute or another amendment if her amendment went down, and I thought that is what we discussed.

What time is now left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Washington has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. GOODLING. And he has the other 3 of his 5?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri yielded 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, could I have a unanimous consent request that the 4 minutes be divided?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman requests that the 4 minutes remaining be equally divided between the two sides.

Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time will be divided. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK] will be recognized for 2 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I thought we were a little further along than we were, and I thought everybody would like for it to be over.

The arguments that we are hearing, quite frankly, are misleading, and I am not questioning anybody's judgment or their rationale.

As I talked to the gentleman yesterday about changing the amendment, he pointed out to me, he says, "Well," he says, "maybe it is because I am an attorney that I am reading into this thing," and maybe that is so.

The only thing I know is I believe that our amendment is straightforward. It would take somebody with a legal mind to read in anything other than what is plainly said.

In fact, the amendment even in the verbiage is very limited. We did not go into a lot of technicalities and legalese. It is very open, straightforward, and above board. That is exactly what we wanted to do.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD] for 2 minutes.

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to support my amendment, to correct the amendment by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK], whose effect would be to prohibit the discussion of homosexuality even in the context of providing health care as a result of the passage of his amendment.

□ 1720

I ask my colleagues to consider some of the words that were spoken on this floor today and questions that were posed to us, Mr. Chairman. How many children must die before we are willing to accept the teaching of the local curriculum so that lives can be saved, so that the mental, emotional health, as well as the physical needs of those children can be met.

I ask my colleagues to support us today in our attempt to reach out to those young people wherever they are, to support them in what they need to go forward in their own lives and for us to stand aside and not be the Federal Government dictating to the local school boards, but, rather, to permit those people who run for the school board on the local level, those people who know the issue on a day-to-day basis, who visit those schools, who talk to the teachers, who talk to the parents, who are the parents, to let them make these very important decisions. I ask for support of the Unsoeld amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2(c) of rule XXIII, the Chair many reduce to not less than 5 minutes the time for any recorded vote that may be ordered on the Hancock amendment without any business or debate.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 224, noes 194, not voting 20, as follows:

Messrs. GORDON, SMITH of Michigan, and EDWARDS of Texas changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Hancock amendments. The Hancock amendments would attempt to remove funding from local school districts with activities and programs which instruct or distribute materials to students that support homosexual orientation as a positive adult outcome. The amendments are mean-spirited and dangerous.

Mr. Chairman, on Monday night Tom Hanks won the Academy Award for best performance by an actor for his starring role in Philadelphia. In his moving acceptance speech, he particularly thanked to gay Americans who influenced his decision to become an actor. Please note that Tom Hanks was not made gay by these early influences. But he was made more open-minded and sensitive to others. His performance was a gift to all of us.

Mr. Chairman, gay affirmative materials and activities do not make people gay. Gay affirmative materials do, however, make people who are eventually going to be lesbian or gay adults feel better about themselves. Such affirmative materials also make those who will eventually be heterosexual adults more open-minded and accepting of others who are different—and thus also feel better about themselves.

Clearly, lesbian and gay youth encounter special challenges because they confront a frequently hostile environment. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports that gay youth are at high risk of depression and suicide. According to former HHS Secretary Sullivan's Task Force on Youth Report, gay youth make up 30 percent of completed youth suicides. Gay youth are at least three times more likely than other youth to try to take their own lives.

These distressing facts are largely due to the ways in which antigay attitudes are promoted by certain individuals and groups in this country. These amendments, if enacted, would further promote gay youth depression, isolation and suicide. This is not a symbolic vote—real young people will be irreparably harmed.

The proper role of Government is to protect and improve the lives of all our young people. I urge my colleagues to reject the Hancock amendments.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Chairman, as a former educator now representing a highly diverse constituency, I must oppose the amendment offered by the distinguished colleague from Missouri. This amendment undermines the very nature and intent of education.

The purpose of education is to introduce and expose students to new or existing information, stimuli, and methods in a controlled environment through instruction and guidance. Certainly, lifestyles and the teaching thereof are essential to human development in our society.

In teaching lifestyles we must explore an abundance of interrelated fundamental elements such as interpersonal skills, effective communication, and coping mechanisms. These skills are key ingredients to success on all levels, in all endeavors. These elements prepare our youth to better cope with, compete in, and later, prosper in this increasingly complex society.

Therefore, I must reject any legislation which prohibits the teaching of homosexuality as a lifestyle in our school systems throughout the Nation. Nor can I support language that penalizes or paralyzes the operation of associated schools, programs, and activities by barring Federal funding.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to oppose the Hancock amendments in the strongest terms possible and to urge my colleagues to vote for the Unsoeld perfecting amendment.

As a life-long advocate of civil rights, as a career human resources professional, and as the mother of a gay son, I urge my colleagues to defeat this damaging amendment.

This amendment severely restricts the autonomy of local schools and boards by reaching the long arm of Federal Government in a place where it has never, ever been before—your local school. This amendment dictates what conversations school administrators and teachers may have with students, what may be taught, and what the curriculum should be.

Mr. Chairman, in that respect, this amendment is a first. Does the gentleman offering it believe that it is OK for the Federal Government to tell local schools that they cannot teach creationism or evolution?

I think not. I would wager that he would say it is best left up to local discretion. And he would be right. We need to let local schools and local communities decide what is appropriate to teach children.

But, even if this amendment did not increase Federal bureaucracy and control, I would oppose it.

The fact is that many, many adolescents in school realize that they are gay or lesbian, or believe that they might be. It is then that they need the most support, especially from peers, teachers, school administrators, and parents.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services under President Bush, Louis Sullivan, issued a report on youth suicide which revealed that gay teens are two to three times more likely than their peers to attempt suicide.

They are also at a far greater risk for drug abuse; dropping out of school; running away from home; prostitution; and unwanted pregnancy.

Mr. Chairman, these are the exact children who need the most help. This amendment takes a sledgehammer to their fragile existence by not allowing them to receive counseling, whether it is about physical health issues, or mental health issues.

But, Mr. Chairman, the most important issue here is who is in charge of your local school? Mr. HANCOCK wants the Federal Government telling local schools what they can and cannot do. I am opposed to that, and I believe that the vast majority of this body is as well.

Again, I urge my colleagues to join me in soundly defeating this destructive and dangerous amendment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably detained during part of this afternoon's consideration of H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act, and therefore missed rollcall votes on two amendments: the Unsoeld amendment to the Hancock amendment—rollcall vote 91—and the Hancock amendment as amended by the Unsoeld amendment—rollcall vote number 92. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on rollcall vote 91 and "yes" on rollcall vote 92.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HANCOCK], as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 301, noes 120, not voting 17, as follows:

Mr. SHARP, Mrs. LOWEY, Mrs. SCHROEDER, and Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. ACKERMAN changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, during consideration of rollcall votes No. 91 and No. 92 earlier today, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "no" on rollcall No. 91 and "yes" on rollcall No. 92.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point, with the understanding that it does not affect the time agreement and is consistent with the rule. Only amendments that have been printed in the RECORD are in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as modified, is as follows:

"TITLE X—COORDINATED SERVICES PROJECTS

"SEC. 10001. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

"(1) Growing numbers of children are negatively affected by influences outside of the classroom which increase their risk of academic failure.

"(2) Factors such as poor nutrition, unsafe living conditions, physical and sexual abuse, family and gang violence, inadequate health care, unemployment, lack of child care and substance abuse adversely affect family relationships and the ability of a child to learn.

"(3) Parents and other caregivers in today's high pressure society often face demands which place restraints on their time and affect their ability to adequately provide for the needs of their families.

"(4) Access to health and social service programs can address the basic physical and emotional needs of children so that they can fully participate in the learning experiences offered them in school.

"(5) Services for at-risk students need to be more convenient, less fragmented, regulated and duplicative in order to meet the needs of children and their families.

"(6) School personnel, parents, and support service providers often lack knowledge of, and access to, available services for at-risk students and their families in the community, and have few resources to coordinate services and make them accessible.

"(7) Service providers, such as teachers, social workers, health care and child care providers, juvenile justice workers and others, are often trained in separate disciplines that provide little support for the coordination of services.

"(8) Coordination of services is more cost effective because it substitutes prevention for expensive crisis intervention.

"(9) Coordinating health and social services with education can help the Nation meet the National Education Goals by ensuring better outcomes for children.

"(b) PURPOSE OF COORDINATING SERVICES.—The purpose of this section is to provide elementary and secondary school students and their families better access to the social, health and education services necessary for students to succeed in school and for their families to take an active role in ensuring that children receive the best possible education.

"SEC. 10002. DEFINITIONS.

"(a) The term 'coordinated services project' refers to a comprehensive approach to meeting the educational, health, social service, and other needs of children and their families, including foster children and their foster families, through a communitywide partnership that links public and private agencies providing such services or access to such services through a coordination site at or near a school.

"(b) An 'eligible entity' is a local educational agency, individual school, or consortium of schools.

"SEC. 10003. PROJECT DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION.

"(a) PROJECT PLANS.—Eligible entities exercising their authority under section 9206(b) shall submit to the Secretary an application for the development of a plan or a plan for the implementation of a coordinated services project.

"(b) PROJECT DEVELOPMENT.—The application for the development of the coordinated services project, which can last for up to one year, shall:

"(1) demonstrate that an assessment will be performed of the economic, social, and health barriers to educational achievement experienced by children and families, including foster children and their foster families, in the community, and the local, State, federal, and privately funded services available to meet such needs;

"(2) identify the measures that will be taken to establish a communitywide partnership that links public and private agencies providing services to children and families; and

"(3) identify any other measures that will be taken to develop a comprehensive plan for the implementation of a coordinated services project or projects.

"(c) PROJECT IMPLEMENTATION.—Eligible entities shall submit to the Secretary a plan for the implementation or expansion of a coordinated services project. Such plan shall include—

"(1) the results of a children and families needs assessment, which will include an assessment of the needs of foster children;

"(2) the membership of the coordinated services project partnership;

"(3) a description of the proposed coordinated services project, its objectives, where it will be located, and the staff that will be used to carry out the purposes of the project;

"(4) a description of how the success of the coordinated services project will be evaluated;

"(5) a description of the training to be provided to teachers and appropriate personnel; and

"(6) information regarding whether or not a sliding scale fee for services will be employed, and if not, an explanation of why such scale is not feasible.

"SEC. 10004. USES OF FUNDS.

"(a) Funds utilized under the authority of section 9206(b) may be used for activities under this title which include—

"The Secretary shall not approve the plan of any project which fails to demonstrate that it is achieving effective coordination after 2 years of implementation.

"SEC. 10006. FEDERAL AGENCY COORDINATION.

"(a) Agency Coordination.—The Secretaries of Education, Health and Human Services, Labor, Housing and Urban Development, Treasury, and Agriculture, and the Attorney General shall review the programs administered by their agencies to identify barriers to service coordination.

"(b) Report to Congress.—Such Secretaries and the Attorney General shall submit jointly a report to the Congress not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act, based on the review required under paragraph (a) recommending legislative and regulatory action to address such barriers, and during this time, shall use waiver authorities authorized under this and other Acts.

"(4) the cost to America's businesses to provide remedial education to high school graduates is approximately $21,000,000,000 per year;

"(6) urban schools enroll a disproportionately large share of the Nation's poor and 'at-risk' youth;

"(13) declining numbers of urban minority high school graduates are pursuing postsecondary educational opportunities;

"(14) urban schools systems have greater problems with teen pregnancy, discipline, drug abuse and gangs than do other kinds of school systems;

"(15) 75 percent of urban school buildings are over 25 years old, 33 percent of such buildings are over 50 years old, and such buildings are often in serious disrepair and create poor and demoralizing working and learning conditions;

"(16) solving the challenges facing our Nation's urban schools will require the concerted and collaborative efforts of all levels of government and all sectors of the community;

"(17) State and Federal funding or urban schools has not adequately reflected need; and

SEC. 331. AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC LAW 815.

(a) SECTION 2.—Section 2 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress; 20 U.S.C. 632) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. PORTION OF APPROPRIATIONS AVAILABLE FOR PAYMENTS.

"For each fiscal year the Secretary shall distribute the funds appropriated in accordance with section 1 which shall be available for carrying out the provisions of sections 5, 9, 10, and 14. Funds provided under section 5 of this Act shall be divided equally between the priority categories of section 1(a)(1) and 1(a)(2) of this Act.".

"Applications for construction or modification projects provided for under this Act must be filed by June 30 of the fiscal year prior to the year in which funds are first requested. The Secretary shall use the following order of priority in approving applications under section 5 and funded in accordance with section 1(a)(1) and section 1(a)(2) of this Act. The priority of payment of application under section 1(a)(1) shall be based on the highest percentage of number of children in need of minimum school facilities. The priority of payment of applications under section 1(a)(2) shall be based on the highest percentage of federally connected students eligible for payment. The Secretary shall use the priorities stated in this section in approving applications in the event the funds appropriated under section 1 of this title and remaining available on any such date for payment to local educational agencies are less than the Federal share of the cost of the projects with respect to which applications have been filed prior to such date (and for which funds under section 1 have not already been obligated). Only applications meeting the conditions for approval under this Act (other than section 6(b)(2)(C)) shall be considered applications for purposes of the preceding sentence. Such order of priority shall provide that applications payments based upon increases in the number of children residing on, or residing with a parent employed on property which is party of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall not be approved for any fiscal year until all other applications under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 5 have been approved for the fiscal year.".

"SEC. 5. LIMITATION ON TOTAL PAYMENTS TO ANY LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.

"(a) Subject to the limitations in subsection (c) the total of the payments to a local educational agency under this Act may not exceed the sum of—

"(1) the estimated increase, since the base year, in the number of children determined with respect to such agency who live on Federal property and have a parent who works on Federal property multiplied by 100 percent of the average per pupil cost of constructing minimum school facilities in the State in which the school district of such agency is situated; and

''(2) the estimated increase, since the base year, in the number of children determined with respect to such agency who have a parent who lives on or works on Federal property multiplied by 50 percent of such cost;

''(3) In computing for any local educational agency the number of children in an increase under paragraph (1) or (2), the estimated number of children described in such paragraph who will be in the membership of the schools of such agency at the close of the increase period shall be compared with the estimated number of such children in average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year. However, the base year average daily membership shall be adjusted to exclude the number of children that formed the basis for previous payments on applications approved 30 or more years prior to the close of the increased period for the current application.

''(b) If two of the paragraphs of subsection (a) apply to a child, the local educational agency shall elect which of such paragraphs shall apply to such child, except that, notwithstanding the election of a local educational agency to have paragraph (2) apply to a child instead of paragraph (1), the determination of the maximum amount for such agency under subsection (a) shall be made without regard to such election.

''(c) A local educational agency shall not be eligible to have any amount included in its maximum by reason of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) unless the increase in children referred to in such paragraph is at least 20, and in the case of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a), is—

''(1) equal to at least 6 percent of the number of federally connected children who were in the average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year, or

''(2) at least 750,

whichever is the lesser.

''(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, whenever and to the extent that, in his judgment, exceptional circumstances exist which make such action necessary to avoid inequity and avoid defeating the purposes of the Act, the Secretary may waive or reduce the minimum number requirement or any percentage requirement or requirements in subsection (c).

''(e) In determining under this section the total of the payments which may be made to a local educational agency on the basis of any application, the total number of children counted for purposes of paragraph (1) or (2), as the case may be, of subsection (a) may not exceed—

''(1) the number of children whose membership at the close of the increase period for the application is compared with average daily membership in the base period for purposes of that paragraph, provided that the base year average daily membership does not include any children which formed the basis of payment in the applications approved 30 or more years ago, minus

''(2) the number of such children whose membership at the close of the increase period was compared with membership in the base year for purposes of such paragraph under the last previous application, provided the application was funded within the last 4 years, if any, of the agency on the basis of which any payments have been or may be made to that agency.''.

(d) SECTION 6.—Section 6 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 636) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

The petition may only be filed during the 30-day period beginning on the date of issuance of the order making the assessment.

Mr. DURBIN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, we have read the gentleman's amendment, and we accept his amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, let me say very briefly, I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Michigan for accepting this amendment.

This amendment establishes smoke-free schools across America. It is consistent but slightly different than the Goals 2000 legislation.

Mr. Chairman, scientific evidence is mounting that secondhand smoke breathed by nonsmokers is a dangerous and toxic environmental pollutant. According to the American Medical Association, environmental tobacco smoke is the third leading cause of early death in the United States.

Children suffer the most from the effects of secondhand smoke. The Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] estimates that, each year, smoke from tobacco causes 150,000 to 300,000 cases of bronchitis and pneumonia in children under 18 months of age. More than a million children suffer from asthma attacks triggered by cigarettes.

We must protect our children from the harmful effects of secondhand smoke by supporting the Durbin amendment. This legislation would restrict smoking in public schools across the country, except in separately ventilated areas. In my own district, Montgomery County, MD, the schools are already smoke free. I believe that children in all programs receiving ESEA funds should receive the same protection as the students in Montgomery County, MD, enjoy.

There is a long list of actions that already have been taken to protect children and adults from the ill effects of environmental tobacco smoke:

McDonald's made the front page of major newspapers recently by banning smoking in their company-owned restaurants.

Pentagon officials have announced that smoking will not be permitted in the military workplace. This action affects more than 2½ million uniformed and civilian personnel all over the world.

Many Federal agencies have banned smoking in their buildings, including Health and Human Services, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Office of Personnel Management.

The State of Maryland wants to ban smoking in the workplaces throughout the State.

If Federal agencies, businesses, and local and State governments are taking steps to protect Americans from the harmful effects of secondhand smoke, how can we in Congress do less?

I urge my colleagues to support a very sensible approach to protecting our children from secondhand smoke as proposed in the amendment by Mr. DURBIN. "The Durbin amendment requires recipients of Federal funds for elementary and secondary educational services to establish and make a good-faith effort to enforce a nonsmoking policy that prohibits smoking in each indoor portion of a facility used in connection with the provision of educational services." However, smoking is permitted in designated areas that meet two criteria. These areas must be separately ventilated, and they must be areas where services are not normally provided directly to children.

Local educational agencies that fail to abide by this amendment would be subject to civil penalties. No Federal funds would be taken away from those agencies and ESEA services to children would not be affected. The amendment also addresses concerns that unions may have, especially if they have collective bargaining contracts that include smoking privileges. Unions would have 1 year to negotiate contract revisions to comply with the law.

Mr. Chairman, secondhand smoke kills 3,000 people each year from lung cancer. Thousands of children develop respiratory diseases from secondhand smoke, which triggers asthma attacks in as many as a million children. The least that we, in Congress, can do is to provide our youth with an unpolluted, smokefree environment in school. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Durbin amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF FLORIDA

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Florida: Beginning on page 768, strike line 22 and all that follows through line 7 on page 776 (and redesignate the subsequent parts accordingly).

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the Committee of the Whole of earlier today, debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto will be limited to 30 minutes. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would eliminate $200 million in new spending from H.R. 6, intended to provide funding for low-interest direct loans for the construction of school facilities. This funding was not requested by President Clinton in his 1995 budget. It is a new, unwanted program put into H.R. 6 by the committee at the last minute, without even being considered by the Subcommittee on Elementary and Secondary Education.

This $200 million program is another provision buried in H.R. 6 that represents unnecessary and wasteful spending that will not contribute to better education.

This Congress loves to create new programs, but leave questions of financing for later. It is particularly hard to argue against spending new money on education without looking like a bad guy. We can all agree that real solutions to many of the problems facing this country are dependent on improving our country's education system.

I question our rationale, however, for dumping more and more Federal money on the problem as a real solution. I think it may be more of a political cop-out. The problem is not that the Federal Government spends too little but that we spend with too little thought. As a nation, we are already spending more on the education of our children than our competitors.

My amendment would delete a new program that would allow local educating agencies to receive loans from the Federal Government at an interest rate that is 1.25 percentage points lower than what the Federal Treasury borrows at. Sounds great. Or does it?

One possible result of these federally subsidized loans would be to discourage the normal process of raising money for planned construction at the local level. Instead, some local school officials may decide to come to Washington to lobby the powers that be in Congress. That, in and of itself, would create a misallocation of scarce school dollars.

And what will they find when they get here? Too few dollars to fund any number of potentially important school construction projects. Look at the funding for this program: $200 million in budget authority in fiscal year 1995, to be divided between over 15,000 school districts.

It is not even clear that these federally subsidized loans would provide a greater benefit to local schools. Currently, most local school districts finance new school construction through tax-exempt municipal bonds. According to the Congressional Research Service, local school districts "are likely to find that this subsidized taxable borrowing is not efficient." Even at 1.25 percentage points below Treasury bonds, municipal bonds may still offer a lower rate. And, then, the idea of 50-year loans is absurd. I have never heard of a 50-year loan.

Plain and simply that is irresponsible spending.

And, of course, every Federal dollar comes with strings attached, and congressional meddling into local school decisions. One example: New requirements, similar to Davis-Bacon mandates on Federal construction projects, that will set a prevailing wage on school building plans financed with this new Federal loan program. The end result would be higher labor costs that would increase the costs of the project dramatically.

Mr. Chairman, a significant majority of this Congress recently voted in favor of the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution; unfortunately, not the two-thirds required for final passage. We may remain unwilling to admit it, but the fact remains: the Federal Government cannot even come close to meeting its current spending obligations. As important as education is, we cannot keep borrowing and going into debt. With major health care and crime legislation before us this year, we must set priorities.

We love to talk about deficit reduction, but here is where the tough choices are actually made. If you are serious about balancing the budget—and if you voted for the balanced budget amendment, as I did—you will vote to trim this new program from H.R. 6.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] rise in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. KILDEE. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. KILDEE. I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Members would reject this amendment. This is an attempt to try to deal with a situation that occurs throughout our Nation, and that is that many, many of our schools are in very inadequate condition, for safety and health reasons, to educate our children. They are also among some of the poorest districts which are not able to put together the financing to take care of either the major renovation of those schools and/or the rebuilding of those schools. This would allow those school districts that cannot float bonds to acquire money for the purposes of renovation. We can no longer continue to accept in this country that poor children must go to poor schools. We have to change that learning environment. This $200 million would allow us to potentially leverage about $1 billion in school construction funds. This is very similar to a program that we now have in the Higher Education Act to provide for programs in higher education facilities.

Mr. Chairman, I would hope we would reject this amendment. This is a well-thought-out amendment. It means a great deal to poorer school districts throughout the entire country. I would hope that we would accept this and understand that this has a great potential to help many of our poorer school districts to put in new facilities that are necessary for the modernization of schools and to meet the demands of new technology.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct, there has been very little emphasis on this amendment, very little study, no hearings, and I have to say that contrary to what we just heard, it really does not give all poor school districts in the country an equal opportunity.

As it is written, Mr. Chairman, the amendment would only allow Federal loans to school districts which receive concentration grants. Let me tell the Members, in my district I have a very, very poor school district, but because of the county situation, which we are correcting down the line, they do not receive concentration grants.

There are also many rural school districts that are quite poor that cannot receive concentration grants. Therefore, they do not qualify for this program.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, as mentioned by the gentleman from Florida

[Mr. MILLER], school districts have 50 years to repay. If they do anything about infrastructure, they are going to discover that their loans and the costs of the loans are far greater than this, so we would be treating education differently than anything else. I think the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER] has a good amendment, and I support that amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, all of us have come to the point where we would rather take turns coming to the floor here and objecting to earmarking facilities in appropriation bills. We have become adamant, many of us in this House, that earmarking is the wrong way to provide needed facilities. I am calling it earmarking. America calls it pork.

We could spend hours, if we had more than just a few minutes, reading to each other our own words about earmarking and pork. This bill, Mr. Chairman, has in it for the first time an established way for the Congress to simply authorize renovation and construction of new facilities, and do it in a way that we do not earmark them, that we no longer will do that.

We cannot have it both ways. We cannot be against pork and then be against a process which the gentleman from California has put in this bill, and the gentleman from Florida would take out, a process which just establishes an institutional way to get on with the business of upgrading existing education facilities and building new ones.

If we want to continue to force Members to come to the floor and earmark projects, which is the wrong way to do it, then vote yes on the gentleman's amendment. If Members would rather take the pork out of it and have a legitimate authorization process go forward, that avoids the politics of getting enough votes to get one's own pork for their own district, then vote no on the gentleman's amendment and keep the language in the bill the way it is.

Finally, let me say this. There is an enormous national need for renovation of existing school facilities and for new school facilities. The condition of America's educational facilities in city after city after city in this country is a national disgrace.

Some facilities do not even have adequate lavatories. Many facilities have no science laboratories. The roofs are caving in. I was in a school the other day in a city in Montana that could have been a school that went through the earthquake in Los Angeles.

But should I come to the floor of the House and insist that I earmark, and as some would say pork money for a facility? No, let us take PAT WILLIAMS and the others out of it. Let us not have us earmarking and porking. Let us simply have a legitimate process of authorization which we now have in the bill.

I urge my colleagues to reject the gentleman's amendment by voting no.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I am not opposing the way money is allocated. I am opposed to the entire program. It is a totally new program of $200 million of funding. We have already taken a bill and a program that was $900 million when President Clinton introduced it which is now $2 billion higher, and now we have to start cutting our spending. I am not opposed to building schools. It is being done very effectively at the local level.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER].

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding the time and I rise in support of this amendment.

The Federal Government in Washington, DC, is now going to accept the responsibility to build schools in America. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER] and I have been offering a series of amendments throughout this bill because we believe a number of programs were added in committee that were not requested by the President, that were not wanted by the Department of Education, but were wanted by Members of Congress. And this is another example of another program added to this bill that dilutes the focus of what we are trying to do by helping disadvantaged students around this country.

We would all like to have all of the money possible to do all of the great things that we want to do. But we do not have unlimited resources. We have scarce resources. As a result, I think we have a responsibility to focus our help where it is most needed.

Every district in America has schools that are falling apart. I would be the first one to admit that. The gentleman from Colorado made a great plea about a school in Montana, and I would suggest under the language of this amendment that there is not one school district in Montana that would ever qualify under the amendment that we have before us.

But let us get back to the focus of this. The Federal Government has no responsibility to build schools in America. That responsibility belongs to States and local communities and it ought to stay there.

Second, I would point out, 50 years, we are going to allow school districts 50 years which they get to pay back. In 50 years the buildings will not be there, which prompts the question: Is this a loan program, or let us be honest and call it what it is, a grant program, because the districts that would qualify under this amendment are districts that cannot afford the buildings, frankly. Let us be honest. They are never going to be able to afford to pay them back.

The last point I would make is a provision in this amendment that would require the construction of these schools to be done under Davis-Bacon. For all of us in this Chamber, we understand that Davis-Bacon laws are going to add 15 percent to 20 percent to the cost of construction. We are going to further burden local districts by requiring them to build these buildings under the Davis-Bacon Act, and it is totally unnecessary.

So with all due respect to the authors of the amendment, I believe that the gentleman from Florida has a very good amendment. We ought to strike this language and save this $200 million authorization, and keep that focus back in on title I and chapter 2 where we would like to have it.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, before yielding to the gentleman from Texas, I would like to say that in my capacity as chairman of this subcommittee, I have visited schools throughout this country and I have seen school buildings in which a Federal judge would not let us house prisoners. As a matter of fact, in my home county where I was born and raised, Genesee County, Michigan, the Federal judge ordered the closing of the county jail, and that county jail was in much better condition than some schools I have seen in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GENE GREEN].

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Miller amendment to H.R. 6. The chairman of the subcommittee pointed out that but for the problems with getting amendments up here on the floor on the crime bill, we are willing to spend billions of dollars to build prisons and help States build prisons. I think it is time we started spending some of that money to build schools, because we know that we cannot build our way out of the crisis, and maybe if we build a few more schools we will not have to build prisons next year.

But this amendment would eliminate title XI in the bill which provides direct loans for the rehabilitation and the building of facilities. Some of the Nation's schools are in a complete state of disrepair, and this program will set us in the right direction in addressing the incredible needs for better school facilities. If we listen to the opposition, they are going to tell us we should not be doing this, they would not want us to provide funding at all, and even this small amount, $200 million all over the country, will not help everyone. But it will get leverage.

Research indicates that the total dollar amount needed to address school facilities is $13 billion nationwide. This modest amount of $200 million in direct loans to school districts for constructing these new facilities will address some of that shortcoming with what both the local schools and school districts and the States are doing.

In Texas we have been involved in a school finance controversy for over 20 years, and it is interesting to note that part of the current school court order for our schools includes a requirement that school facilities be addressed. School facilities are a vital part of the component, as much a part as the school books and as much a part as the teachers, and to say we should not help with facilities in the Federal Government is like putting our heads in the sand.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the Miller Florida amendment and give our schools some assistance to provide our Nation's school children the education they deserve. This will not solve all of the facility problems, but it will be leverage, and it will help.

Again, I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding me the time. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

The gentleman from Florida has made an eloquent and convincing case that we should not create a $200 million a year Federal school construction program. He has made a convincing case as to why the Federal Government should no meddle in the affairs of school construction. He has made a convincing case about not spending money we do not have. He has argued, with all due respect, against a bill that is not here.

Let me describe what this bill does as opposed to the arguments made against it by our friend from Florida. It is true that under the rather bizarre bookkeeping rules that we have in the Federal Government that this has a $200 million a year price tag attached to it. It is also true that if this program operates under any normal economic assumptions, it will run in the black.

Here is how it works: if a school district borrows $10 million directly from the Federal Government to build a school, it will pay an interest rate under this bill of 1.25 percent below the Federal Government's 30-year rate to borrow money. Today that means that that school district would borrow money at approximately 5 percent.

The Federal Government would acquire that $10 million, either by raising it the way we do, or by borrowing it, and today the Federal Government borrows money at an average of 4.87 percent.

So here is the way it works: The Federal taxpayers would incur a debt service obligation of about $487,000 this year to produce the $10 million school loan. The school that borrows the money would pay us back $500,000.

Now in Washington arithmetic, that says we are in the red. In the real world arithmetic, that says we wind up as Federal taxpayers $13,000 in the black each year. If this were a $200 million a year grant program, I would join the gentleman from Florida in supporting his amendment. It is not. This is a program that will leverage up this year $1 billion of new school construction on a cash flow basis to the taxpayers that returns in the black.

I also thought, with all due respect to my friends, that Republicans support programs that pay for themselves and do not put the country in the red. If that is the case, this passes the litmus test of a Republican program, and my friends should oppose the Miller amendment and leave the bill the way that it is.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY], the chairman of the Republican Conference.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time. I rise in support of the Miller amendment.

☐ 1820

Ladies and gentlemen, we build schools so we can teach children. Let me suggest to you what will be the lessons the schoolchildren of America will draw from this bill.

If this provision remains in the bill, they will be told by their Government that irrespective of the concept of dual federalism which they are taught in their civics classes, the Federal Government should be so involved in local education issues that despite the 200 or so billion dollars this Government is in debt each year, we ought to create a $200 million program wherein we will make loans from the Federal Government to the local school district to construct schools, and we will lend that money to the local school district for 1.25 percent less than what we borrow the money for. This is hardly a lesson in prudent finance to teach our young people.

And we will need the $200 million to cover what, the interest subsidy and defaults, so we are writing here a provision into the bill that assumes that the local school districts will default on even a subsidized loan paid at rates more favorable than the lender-borrower.

Furthermore, we are going to teach our youngsters that in consideration for their well-being, we are going to force all of these States and all of these school districts within these States that avail themselves of this largesse, that they must disregard their own State's laws and construct the schools in a more costly fashion that complies with Davis-Bacon.

If our schoolchildren are dumb enough to buy that, ladies and gentlemen, they will never graduate.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Let me just make this point: The $200 million figure that my friend, the gentleman from Texas, made reference to is not tied to loan defaults. The loan default rate for public school districts across this country is almost always, almost always less than 3 percent of money borrowed. That is simply not the reason for the $200 million, just a rather strange and arcane budget system that the gentleman helped to write.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER] to strike title XI, School Facilities Improvement.

I would like to say at the outset that I find it somewhat incredulous that we are hearing some ranting and raving from the other side of the aisle about Federal encroachment into education when we have had amendment after amendment coming from the other side of the aisle mandating that the Federal Government get involved in curricula and other things and not allow the local level, local school districts, people back home to shape their own destiny. I do not think the argument cuts one way and not another way.

Title XI authorizes low-interest Federal direct loan programs modeled after the existing higher education, college housing, and academic facilities loan program, and the program, as was mentioned, would be directed to poorer school districts for school construction, reconstruction, and renovation projects.

This low-interest loan program will use limited Federal resources to leverage a maximum amount of aid to local schools. Preliminary estimates from the Congressional Budget Office indicate that the program's $200 million authorization will make about $1 billion in loan principal available to borrowers. According to recent studies, one in every four public school buildings in the United States is in inadequate condition. In fact, over 75 percent of our Nation's urban school buildings are over 25 years old and 33 percent of the buildings are over 50 years old.

The total cost of making needed replacements and renovations is estimated to exceed $100 billion. Financing such repairs is primarily the responsibility of States and local districts, but limited Federal aid is vital to support local projects in those areas where the costs of such activities would otherwise be prohibitive.

Let me say it has been my pleasure working with my colleagues, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ANDREWS], on this innovative and important proposal. I thank them for their leadership in this area.

If we expect our children to meet the national goals set forth in the Educate America Act, we must provide them at the very minimum a safe and comfortable environment conducive to learning.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Miller amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOEKSTRA], a freshman member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support today of the Miller amendment.

I think it is important for our colleagues to recognize where and how this money makes its way to Washington and then back to the local school districts.

First, if we ever get to a point where we have a balanced budget, the dollars are going to be coming from constituents from local school districts. They have a habit of coming to Washington where we will establish a new bureaucracy to administer the loan funds, so the dollars coming from local school districts, we will eat up a portion of those costs in administrative costs. School districts will then have to apply to get this money back to their districts, and once they receive the money, they will be burdened with new Federal mandates in terms of how they will construct or how they may use these dollars for a construction project.

Once again, we will burden them with things like Davis-Bacon regulations, so that not going out and getting competitive bids, they will be mandated to provide the prevailing wages within that district regardless of whether they have received competitive bids. So rather than going out and helping the neediest school districts, what we will be doing is sending money back to them and tying up and spending this billion dollars in ways that are not most cost-effective to the individual school districts.

Let us leave the money back in the local districts.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the committee, and I have to tell you that I have listened to this debate now endlessly, and I am amazed at what is going on here.

I guess you have to kind of rethink this thing. I am a little surprised that we think all the knowledge on education resides here. I am a little surprised to think that all the resources in education reside here.

It seems to me this is one of the things in this country that has been strong because it has been locally controlled and local responsibility.

And we move increasingly to take a bankrupt Federal Government and want to provide funding for that kind of thing. It is surprising to me that we was to go deeper with the Federal Government, intruding themselves into local government that has worked well for that very reason.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, as a fiscal conservative, my problem is this is a new program, $200 million of new spending that we do not have.

Where is the $200 million going to come from? We have a freeze on spending. We have pay-go type rules. We are going to have to take them from somewhere else.

Are we going to take them from title I, from the Eisenhower program, from chapter 2? We do not have the money to create a totally new loan program.

A lot of States are not going to be able to take advantage of this. In Florida, in my district, we do not have prevailing-wage laws, and all of a sudden we are going to enforce prevailing-wage laws in Florida. There is no school district in Florida that would even want this.

The interest rate is 1¼ percent of the taxable interest rate, 1¼ percent below. School districts borrow it at a tax-exempt rate. Even the A-1 rating, the Congressional Research Service says, is lower than that 1¼ below the taxable rate. This does not make any sense.

It costs us $200 million a year. Let us focus our money on chapter 2, title I, on the Eisenhower program, and put the money where it is best needed.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 181, noes 235, not voting 22, as follows:

☐ 1850

Messrs. WALSH, DIXON, PARKER, and NEAL of Massachusetts, and Ms. LAMBERT changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. HOLDEN, SKELTON, ISTOOK, and EWING changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BARRETT of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably detained and missed rollcall vote number 93. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes" on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. HUGHES] having assumed the chair, Mr. PRICE of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PROVIDING FOR AN ADJOURNMENT OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 232) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 232

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on the legislative day of Thursday, March 24, 1994, it stand adjourned until noon on Tuesday, April 12, 1994, or until noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the Senate recesses or adjourns at the close of business on Friday, March 25, 1994, Saturday, March 26, 1994, Monday, March 28, 1994, Tuesday, March 29, 1994, Wednesday, March 30, 1994, or Thursday, March 31, 1994, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand recessed or adjourned until noon on Monday, April 11, 1994, or at such time on that day as may be specified by the Majority Leader or his designee in the motion to recess or adjourn, or until noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the House and the Minority Leader of the Senate, shall notify the Members of the House and the Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER AND THE MINORITY LEADER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATIONS AND MAKE APPOINTMENTS NOTWITHSTANDING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding any adjournment of the House until Tuesday, April 12, 1994, the Speaker and the minority leader be authorized to accept resignations and to make appointments authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13, 1994

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday, April 13, 1994.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE MARINE MAMMAL PROTECTION ACT

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4122) to temporarily extend certain provisions of the Marine Mammal Protection Act, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I do so to give the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. STUDDS, a chance to explain the bill.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I frankly wish that we did not have to bring this bill before the Members today.

For the past five years, the fishermen of this country have been operating under an exemption of the "taking" provisions of the Marine Mammal Protection Act [MMPA]. That exemption expires on April 1. Two nights ago, the House passed a reauthorization bill which would have established a new management program to preserve the fishermen's right to fish and saved marine mammals. The staff of both bodies then worked around the clock to reach a compromise that both House and Senate could support. Last night, the House passed what we thought was an agreed-to text.

Unfortunately, events in the other body over the last 24 hours have changed the situation, and we will not be able to come to agreement before the April 1 deadline. This bill would extend the exemption period for another 30 days, during which time we will continue to work with our colleagues to pass legislation that is fair to everyone, and—most importantly—meets the goal of this landmark law: to protect marine mammals for future generations.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, the current exemption in the Marine Mammal Protection Act which allows American fishermen to operate expires on April 1, 1994. This committee has worked since last year to put together an acceptable bill that could be passed in the House and Senate. In fact, we passed a House bill on Monday, and what we believed to be a compromise text agreed to by the other body on Tuesday. We are now receiving from the other body a new version which is unacceptable to the Members of the House. Therefore, in order to keep American fishermen operating and allow us to work out these new problems with the other body, we are passing a 1-month extension of the fishery provisions in the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 4122

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 114(a)(1) of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1383a(a)(1)), is amended by striking "April 1, 1994," and inserting in lieu thereof "May 1, 1994,".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IMPROVING AMERICA'S SCHOOLS ACT OF 1994

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 366 and rule XXIII, the Chairman declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 6.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6) to extend for 6 years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes, with Mr. PRICE of North Carolina in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER] had been disposed of and title IX through the remainder of the bill was open for amendment at any point.

Are there further amendments to the bill?

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

The amendment I originally planned on introducing today was designed to address a problem brought to my attention by one of the school boards in my district.

Under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act, the IDEA, students in our public schools with disabilities are provided special administrative protections against suspensions or expulsion. As I understand it, this is to prevent any school from using disciplinary actions as a way to avoid its constitutional responsibility to educate these students. Is that correct?

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, on this subject; yes, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the purpose of my amendment was to clarify in the law that these special administrative protections would not affect cases in which deadly weapons were involved or cases of serious assault.

In the last several days, it has come to my attention that there is a note to the regulations of the IDEA addressing this matter, but this does not appear to be well-known to our local school districts who have been following the so-called 10-day guideline for suspensions from the Hoenig decision.

Thus, I believe that placing this exception in law would free our schools to take necessary actions to protect all students and teachers against violent behavior.

I have been asked by Subcommittee Chairman OWENS, however, if I would be willing to pull this amendment so that the issue can be fully reviewed during reauthorization of the IDEA. I would certainly be willing to do so, and I yield to Mr. OWENS.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, the Subcommittee on Select Education and Civil Rights is now considering the reauthorization of IDEA, and we are already having hearings. A hearing will be scheduled to allow Members to testify. There are a number of Members who have requested to testify before the committee, and we will have a full hearing just for Members. The gentleman from Florida will be invited to testify. We will certainly consider this matter during the consideration of this bill.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to comment that the overwhelming majority of children with disabilities are serious, devoted learners whose efforts deserve our support and admiration.

However, I believe the scope of the special administrative protections was never intended to protect that very small number of students whose behavior endangers their fellow students, especially those with disabilities, and teachers.

I hope this matter can be addressed during the IDEA reauthorization, and thank Mr. OWENS for his cooperation.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GUNDERSON

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GUNDERSON (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

□ 1900

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which requires disclosure by programs that bring students to Washington to study the Congress regarding disclosure of such issues and solicitation and selection methods and program costs.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STARK TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GUNDERSON

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STARK to the amendment offered by Mr. GUNDERSON: At the end of the amendment made to page 826, after line 18, add the following:

"(5)(A) Educational organization, as defined by this section, means an organization or group which—

"(i) provides special honors programs, seminars, citizenship experiences, Government study programs, educational vacations, student exchange programs, or other educational experiences or honors generally directed toward minors or high school students and charges a tuition or enrollment fee;

"(ii) offers its program away from a student's regular place of school attendance, includes not less than 1 supervised night away from home, and is intended to enhance a student's regular course of study; and

"(B) The definition in subparagraph (A) shall not include—

"(i) a local educational agency, State educational agency, a State department of education, or an elementary or secondary school as defined by this Act;

"(ii) an institution of higher education as defined by the Higher Education Act of 1965; or

"(iii) a local organization sponsored by an elementary or secondary school, a recreational or entertainment organization, a local sports activity group, or a social club.

Mr. STARK (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I am proud to have worked with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] on this amendment. It is virtually identical to my bill H.R. 3109 which has the support of 22 cosponsors—including 7 Republicans and 6 Education and Labor Committee members.

Ranking Member GOODLING is a cosponsor and the legislation was introduced in the other body by Senators METZENBAUM and DOLE.

As the gentleman from Wisconsin has already pointed out, the amendment requires more disclosure by programs like the Washington groups that bring students out to study Congress. There have been well-documented marketing and recruiting abuses by some of these programs which need correction.

Informed parents can best decide the worth of these programs. But to do this they need to know how the $700–$800 per week cost is being spent and how their children were selected. That's the information this bill requires the programs to disclose.

I am aware that the Department of Education has questions about the scope of this amendment. With the agreement of Mr. GUNDERSON and the committee, I am offering a perfecting amendment that should answer these concerns. It specifically exempts local groups, school programs, and university programs.

Mr. Chairman, given the strong bipartisan support for this legislation, I hope my colleagues will support the Gunderson amendment as modified by my amendment.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment is a good amendment.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the bill is originally a bill authored by the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK]. I was, I think, the lead Republican cosponsor, because I was on the Committee on Education and Labor.

I have offered his bill as an amendment. He has now corrected it by an amendment. We are one big happy family, and we accept his amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to address the Gunderson amendment, as amended?

Mr. ROEMER. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROEMER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I want to come to a better understanding of exactly the implications of this amendment. It is my understanding that the gentleman's amendment requires educational organizations to disclose certain information to students' parents prior to receiving payment for any Washington-based programs. Is it correct that while the gentleman's amendment requires these organizations to provide information to parents about food, lodging and transportation, these education organizations would not have to provide parents with the specific names of companies with which it contracts? For example, the Close Up Foundation would not have to provide the parents of the 24,000 students who participate in its programs each year with a list of the approximately 120 food vendors, 10 bus companies and 25 hotels it utilizes in any given year.

In the same vein, is it also correct that it is sufficient for an education organization to report the program expenditures in the aggregate, even when the organization itself provides the service? For example, the Close Up Foundation provides its own program staffing. Under the gentleman's amendment, is it correct that this organization would not be required to list the names and salaries of the approximately 150 employees involved in this activity.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROEMER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, that is correct. What we want to do is make sure that groups which use outside management companies make it clear how those outside management companies spend funds paid to them.

For those organizations which rely on outside management, such as the Congressional Youth Leadership Council, we expect the education organization's disclosure of each category to include all spending, either by the organization or by the management company, on that organization's activities.

Organizations such as the Close Up Foundation, which do not contract with a single management company, could meet the disclosure requirements by providing two parents the aggregate costs of all vendors for each category.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's cooperation on this matter and would like to ask my colleague from Wisconsin one additional question.

There are organizations, such as Close Up, which do not direct mail marketing to students and parents, but, instead rely on teachers to work with students who are interested in participating in the program.

These teachers serve as program liaisons to parents.

Could Close Up fulfill its disclosure requirements by including the appropriate information in the packet of information it sends to teachers, who in turn must send the materials to parents?

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, as long as Close Up ensures that teachers give the disclosure information to parents while the application is being completed, then the organization has complied with the amendment.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished colleague for his clarification of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BOEHNER

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. BOEHNER: Beginning on page 776, strike line 8 and all that follows through line 19 on page 798 (and redesignate the subsequent parts accordingly).

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, yes, I would like to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announces then that pursuant to our earlier agreement, the time, 30 minutes, will be allocated to this amendment with the time equally divided between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER].

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment to strike the urban and rural education programs—new programs which were not requested by the Clinton administration. I do so not because I am against improving education in the cities and rural communities of this Nation. In fact, I have a very rural district. No, I am offering this amendment because I cannot see why we need a separate program for rural education and another for urban, when we have before us billions of dollars' worth of programs aimed at improving education throughout the Nation, including in the cities and small towns.

As I have said in the statements for my previous amendments, the best thing we can do for our schools is keep this bill streamlined and focused. I have asked this question before, in order to try to fund the $300 million authorized for these two programs. Are we willing to take money from title I, and chapter 2, and other programs? Because that is exactly what we will be forced to do. I don't understand why we want to keep adding program after program to this bill. Why can't we give local communities and States the flexibility to use the money under this bill to suit their particular needs and priorities? Why do we insist on defining their priorities for them?

I also want to look at the purposes of these programs. First of all, both programs will provide demonstration grants. In looking at other programs, not necessarily just in education, I find that demonstration projects tend to demonstrate nothing more than the ability of the same grantees to receive the same grant year after year.

Second, the programs establish two new commissions. I submit that the last thing this country needs is yet another commission inspired by the Federal Government. I find it also interesting that we are going to fund these commissions and their bureaucrats at the expense of getting more money to the students.

Finally, the objectives of these grants are nothing new. They are the same objectives we expect of every school and which other programs throughout the ESEA attempt to address. In other words, these two programs aim to do nothing new, nothing specific. They are attempts to target more Federal education dollars to the cities and rural areas. This is why we must look at these two programs within the context of the entire ESEA. When we do, I can't see the justification for funding them separately at the expense of the larger ESEA programs.

Congress can help urban and rural schools. In fact, the ESEA is geared toward improving education throughout the Nation, especially in troubled areas. Since the urban and rural schools appear to be the ones most in need, I would think that the ESEA as a whole would help these schools. If we look at title I, chapter 2, the fund for the improvement of education, drug-free schools, Eisenhower professional development, and most of the other programs, I believe urban and rural schools will be helped, without the existence of these two programs.

This is why I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

The language of the gentleman from the other side would strike language I put in this bill, which is an effort to help inner city schools and rural schools. Let me talk to the rural schools' need here.

Sixty percent of the school districts in this country are rural. Let me tell the Members a few facts about those rural areas and those rural schools. They enroll a disproportionately larger share of our country's poor and at-risk youth than do any other schools.

Approximately one out of four of America's rural children live below the level of poverty. Rural preschoolers have less access to early childhood education than do any other children across this country.

There is an enormous need, so my language, in which I was joined by a number of my colleagues who also want to speak this evening, offers small incentives and initiatives to help those schools: in-service training for rural school teachers; long-distance learning; computer technology development; innovative pilot projects, school consortia activities, where a number of schools can come together in activities.

It also establishes a National Commission on Rural Education to conduct a study on the condition of rural education in America, and come back to this Congress and make recommendations regarding how we might further help the children that go to rural schools.

The issue here, Mr. Chairman, is not a new program. The issue here is the teachers, the parents, and the schools and the students from rural areas need just a little Federal attention. We are trying to provide that with this very modest language, which the gentleman would delete.

I urge my colleagues to vote no.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. POMEROY].

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise is strong opposition to the Boehner amendment. This amendment is all advised and ill conceived. It would eliminate the entire Rural, and Urban, Education title in this bill. I cannot impress upon the membership of this body how important this title is to rural and urban areas, of this country.

I was an original cosponsor of Mr. William's bill, upon which this program was based. I was very pleased to see it incorporated into H.R. 6.

The facts about rural America overwhelmingly support the need for this assistance: academic performance of rural students is lower than average, poverty among rural school age students is increasing, schools continue to operate in decrepit facilities, there is no capital with which to make improvements, and additional money is needed to address these needs.

Rural schools have the same, if not greater, needs than their suburban counterparts. High costs are coupled with an inability to leverage revenue to fund needed programs. Add to that geographic isolation and teacher recruitment obstacles, and rural students are most certainly at a disadvantage. In nearly every meeting on education I have with constituents, without fail I hear about the need for technology assistance for out schools if we are to keep them competitive. They need access to innovative education and they need access to financial assistance if our students are to be able to excel.

The grants included in the bill represent a collaborative, concerted assistance program for rural educators. The bill would provide grants that would encourage innovative school reform programs, use of telecommunications technology for learning, and inservice training, and teacher recruitment initiative with colleges and universities.

This assistance is desperately needed and I urge my colleagues to vote "No" on the Boehner amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have been proud to have a chance to work with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER] on a series of amendments to try to cut spending and add fiscal sanity to this bill.

This bill started off as $10.5 billion when the President introduced it. We have added almost $2 billion more of spending to the program. We just keep adding new program after new program. This is a $250 million program, actually two programs. I do not know what we need two more programs for. We are already giving money under chapter 1 to rural and urban schools. This is not requested by the President; it was not included in his budget.

Last week we spent 2 days debating the Balanced Budget Amendment. Now what are we doing? We are just adding more spending, adding more spending. We have to get some sense in our budget.

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER] to try to get the budget in balance.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

I think we ought to put sense in our programs, also. We are talking about a $22.5 billion crime bill to build new jails, to build new prisons. Why waste $22.5 billion on the back end when we could invest in our young people in our rural and urban centers on the front end? To me that makes no sense, to concentrate on spending money on bricks and mortar, where it costs more to imprison a person than it costs to go to Yale or Harvard.

The urban amendment recognizes that central city schools, along with rural schools, will face the greatest challenge in the American educational system in attempting to meet the national goals of the year 2000.

The ability of the Nation's major school systems will be greatly challenged by the new competitiveness in the world. We talk about the NAFTA, we talk about the GATT, the Uruguay rounds. Unless we have all of our young people in this country competitive, then we will not be the No. 1 country that we have been throughout our history.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the passage of this amendment to give urban schoolchildren an opportunity.

Some of the statistics are terrible: shortages of teachers in urban school systems are two and a half times greater than that in other school systems. Urban schools enroll approximately one-third of the Nation's poor, 40 percent of the Nation's African-American children, and 30 percent of the Nation's Latino children.

Urban preschoolers have one-half the access to early childhood development programs as do other children. Seventy-five percent of urban school buildings are over 25 years old. Thirty-three percent of such buildings are over 50 years old. These buildings are often in serious disrepair and create poor and unhealthy working and learning conditions.

We have the high amount of lead in our school systems and in our areas that work against the youngsters' learning ability, so I urge sanity here. Put common sense where it ought to be. Mr. Chairman, I urge the defeat of this amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Indiana [Ms. LONG].

Ms. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Boehner amendment. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak about this amendment from two perspectives. The first is as a Democrat that represents a fairly conservative district. I am a member of the Conservative Democratic Forum and the Mainstream Forum. I vote for balanced budget amendments.

I consider myself a fiscal conservative. I say to the gentleman from Ohio—the author of the amendment—I understand your desire to get a handle on the budget deficit.

But, I think this particular amendment is misdirected. Education is one area that deserves more money—not less.

I also speak about the amendment as the Chair of the Congressional Rural Caucus. The Boehner amendment would eliminate much needed assistance for rural schools.

Approximately 60 percent of our country's public school districts are located in our Nation's smaller cities and towns. Rural schools face unique challenges to providing adequate educational services including poverty, geographic isolation, and teacher recruitment.

In fact, the GAO [General Accounting Office] recently reported that the rural school-age poverty rate rose to 20.4 percent in 1990, well above the 1990 urban rate of 16 percent.

Smalltown schools also face logistical difficulties due to geographic isolation. More often than not, these schools cannot offer the variety and depth of courses commonly available in other areas, or target programs to specific groups. Furthermore, rural schools have difficulty recruiting and retaining qualified teachers.

Fortunately, these problems are not insurmountable; the difficulties smalltown and rural schools face can be remedied through additional attention and funding. The funding that the Boehner amendment seeks to strike would assist rural school districts in undertaking genuine school reform, preparing more rural graduates for higher education and vocational training, and training and recruiting teachers.

It would also enable school districts to use the most advanced telecommunications technologies for learning. This program is an essential step in addressing the education needs of smalltown America. I commend Mr. WILLIAMS and the Education and Labor Committee for the work on these important provisions, and strongly urge my colleagues to oppose the Boehner amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the gentleman's amendment to strike the urban and rural education assistance provisions from H.R. 6.

The urban and rural education assistance provisions should remain in this legislation because they help rural and urban schools undertake school improvement initiatives.

Children should have an equal opportunity in terms of the achievement of the national goals as set forth in the Goals 2000 legislation which passed this body yesterday, as well as in H.R. 6.

The urban and rural provisions as included in H.R. 6 will assist both urban and rural public schools in meeting the national education goals as well as improve the educational and social well being of urban and rural public school children.

The provisions include demonstration grants to a number of central city school districts to demonstrate creative and replicable approaches for improving the performance of students in urban school districts. There is also a rural component.

The provisions in H.R. 6 also encourage community, parental, and business collaboration in the improvement of urban schools. The ability of the Nation's major urban areas to deliver high quality education has a direct effect on the economic development of the Nation's inner cities.

The urban initiative recognizes that central city schools along with rural schools will face the greatest challenges in American education in attempting to meet the national education goals by the year 2000.

The success of urban schools in boosting the achievement of its minority youth will determine the ability of the Nation to close the gap between the "haves and the have nots" in society.

Urban schools have higher drop out rates, more problems with health care, and less parental participation than other kinds of school systems.

Shortages of teachers in urban school systems are 2.5 times greater than shortages in other kinds of school systems.

Seventy-five percent of urban school buildings are over 25 years old, 33 percent of such buildings are over 50 years old, and these buildings are often in serious disrepair and create poor and unhealthy working and learning conditions. It is difficult for children to perform at their maximum learning potential under these conditions. The provisions in H.R. 6 are greatly needed to help the children who encounter these conditions every day achieve the standards as set forth in this legislation.

I ask my colleagues to oppose this amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to Representative Boehner's amendment to strike title XII from H.R. 6.

Title XII, which authorizes Urban and Rural Education Demonstration Grants, is designed to help our Nation's rural and urban schools in undertaking school improvement initiatives. Part B, specifically, recognizes that central city schools, along with rural schools, will face the greatest challenges in American education in attempting to meet the national education goals by the year 2000.

Clearly, the quality of public education in the Nation's major urban areas has a direct effect on the economic development of our innercities. Urban schools currently enroll a disproportionately large share of the Nation's poor, and 40 percent of the Nation's African-American children and 30 percent of the Nation's Hispanic youth. The success of urban schools in boosting the achievement of its minority youth will determine the ability of the Nation to close the gap between the haves and havenots in our society.

In addition, shortages of teachers in urban school systems are 2.5 times greater than shortages in other kinds of school systems. And of all urban school buildings, 75 percent are over 25 years old, and 33 percent are over 50 years old. The school buildings are often in such disrepair that learning and working conditions are demoralizing and unsafe. Certainly, State and Federal funding of urban schools have not accurately met the growing needs of such schools. Federal funding that is well targeted, flexible, and accountable will significantly contribute to the overall improvement of our Nation's innercity schools.

I believe title XII of H.R. 6 is an honest and comprehensive attempt to meet these unique needs. Urban Education Demonstration Grants will help to increase the academic achievement and readiness of urban schoolchildren, improve graduation rates, and prepare urban school graduates to enter higher education, pursue careers, and exercise their responsibilities as citizens.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Boehner amendment. If our innercity children are to succeed, they must be given the tools to do so. This long-term investment will pay tenfold in future social and economic savings.

Ms. LAMBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to Representative BOEHNER'S amendment to eliminate the Urban and Rural Education Demonstration Grants programs from H.R. 6.

As a product of the public school system in the Arkansas Delta, I recognize the importance of strengthening rural education. The major problems we face at home—rural health care, job creation, and crime prevention—all rely on education for effective solutions.

I sympathize with Representative BOEHNER'S desire to cut wasteful programs from the budget, but assistance to rural schools is certainly not wasteful spending. From 1979 to 1986, the U.S. poverty rate for children under the age of 18 increased twice as fast in rural areas as in the rest of the Nation. Because research has identified socioeconomic status as the most powerful predictor of student performance, and because a disproportionate level of the Nation's poor live in rural America, these statistics should be of particular interest to us as legislators.

This provision of H.R. 6 would give rural schools the resources and incentives necessary to initiate innovative new programs such as distance learning technologies for improving rural education.

This program is an essential step in addressing the education needs of rural America. I thank Representative WILLIAMS and the Education and Labor Committee for the hard work on these very important provisions and urge my colleagues to oppose the Boehner amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF FLORIDA

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Florida: Beginning on page 870, strike line 1 and all that follows through line 20 on page 875 (and redesignate the subsequent parts accordingly).

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] opposed to the amendment?

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the unanimous consent agreement previously entered into, 30 minutes will be allowed on this amendment, equally divided between the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this is the last opportunity that Mr. BOEHNER and I will have to enhance the effectiveness of this education bill by eliminating unwanted and unneeded programs. The National Writing Project was added to H.R. 6 during the committee markup contrary to the President's proposal and against the recommendations of Vice President GORE's National Performance Review. This program has a noble goal, but we don't need a separate program. Remember when Clinton and Secretary Riley submitted their proposal for funding elementary and secondary education, they requested $10.5 billion, and the committee increased that level to $12.4 billion. This program represents one of the many unneeded and unwanted programs.

Mr. Chairman, the National Performance Review recommended the elimination of any program that has achieved its purpose, or could be supported with non-Federal resources.

Therefore, the Clinton administration placed the National Writing Project on this year's budget hit list.

In this year's budget, the President said,

> No funds are requested because the administration has proposed that the program not be reauthorized. Furthermore, funds available to State and local educating agencies under the Eisenhower Professional Development Program could also be used for this purpose.

This project, therefore, reflects duplicative spending. As the President enumerated, the Eisenhower Professional Development Program authorizes $800 million for teacher training. So, why does the Federal Government have to create a new program telling school districts exactly how to spend money to improve writing. I agree with the President; the Eisenhower Professional Development Program creates an appropriate venue for the National Writing Project. Title II, additionally, provides block grants to reform and improve schools.

For these reasons, the National Writing Project is excessive and, unnecessarily, focuses on a specific constituency. It is too narrow for the spirit of this bill. Our intent in H.R. 6 was to create more flexibility for local educating agencies. Let's eliminate this program and allow the Eisenhower Professional Development Program and title II to achieve this purpose where local and private funds fall short.

We must get our house in order. I encourage my colleagues to eliminate this excessive spending program. Support the President and the Vice President and vote in favor of my amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may briefly consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I would say that I hope all Members of the House will reject this amendment. The language in the legislation is identical to legislation that I have introduced along with Senator COCHRAN of Mississippi which has over 130 cosponsors. It has bipartisan support. This is a program that has been fantastically successful in teaching teachers how to teach writing so that young people can learn how to write and how to provide for critical assessment.

This program has received national honors from private businesses, from foundations, from the nonprofit sector of our economy. This program garners far more in private money than we will provide under this legislation. But that is exactly the point. By providing a small amount of seed money to keep the program going, we will be able to garner all kinds of additional private, nonprofit support for this program. And that is what we want to do. That is what we call the private-public partnership, and in this case the multiplier of teaching these teachers the skills to teach our young children how to write.

How many of my colleagues have had the experience of having a résumé in their office and talking to young people, and what is it we want to know? "Can you write? Give me a writing sample." Unfortunately, all too many American students and graduates fall short on that.

In California we have just gone through our new assessments on education, the new high standards assessments program. We found out that those school districts and programs where we have used the national writing projects, students are scoring better than in those school districts where they did not have the advantage of those programs. This is a program of merit. It is a program of great vision, and we ought to continue it. And it does in fact allow us to leverage Federal dollars into private participation.

Senator COCHRAN of Mississippi has supported this and garnered support in the Senate for it, and I believe we will be successful. And I hope that Members will reject this amendment that is very penny-wise but again very pound-foolish in terms of the number of students that we have a chance to impact to improve the writing and critical thinking skills of those students.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, if the program was as great as the gentleman has indicated and has the support, why would the Clinton budget say, "The project has a narrow focus and has received Federal funds for many years. It has been amply demonstrated as a strategy for improving the teaching of writing and should be supported with State and local funds."

Mr. MILLER of California. It is as great as I said, I would say to the gentleman. And the Clinton administration would say that because they are misguided.

Mr. BOEHNER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the National Writing Project and in opposition to this amendment.

I am committed to reduce federal spending. For instance, in 1993 the Citizens Against Government Waste gave me the "Taxpayer Hero Award" with a rating of 85 percent, the highest rating given to any Congressman from Pennsylvania, and the Watchdog of the Treasury presented me the "Golden Bulldog Award" for the seventh straight year.

In our efforts to curb the deficit we must evaluate each program for its effectiveness. Although I understand the efforts of my colleagues to streamline federally supported elementary and secondary programs, the National Writing Project is one program that gives us the most bang for the buck. Federal funds are a small, but important part of the funding for this invaluable program. In my area, federal funds allow teachers and students from poor school districts to participate in this program who otherwise would be left out. Students participate in a summer program that enhances their knowledge and skills while being kept off the streets and out of trouble.

Teachers throughout my district have participated in this program. Implementing what they learned into the classroom has had a tremendous impact. This impact is not just upon english class, but social studies, and even mathematics. Mathematics teachers have described to me how using National Writing Project tools in the classroom have helped students understand mathematic concepts. For instance, explaining a mathematics formula in writing can bring about a firmer understanding of that formula in a student's mind.

School boards recognize the importance of this program. For instance, upon learning of the dramatic impact this program was having in a number of their classrooms, the Rose-Tree Media School District doubled the number of stipends they provide teachers to participate in this program.

Most importantly, children recognize the importance of this program. Let me quote some students in Mrs. Rauch's class at Springton Lake Middle School. Michelle Conquest says, "Six months ago I could not write a simile. Now I receive many compliments for my writing." Eve Bateman says, "I've learned to express myself, use figurative language, and write better endings. I would like to learn more about quotation usage, how to pick a title that fits the story, and make my stories longer without them going on, and on, and on." And Jacob Rossiter says, "When I grow up I want to be a famous writer and dedicate it to the best 6th grade writing workshop teacher, Mrs. Rauch. Ever since I've been in her class I've started to enjoy writing."

These children are motivated to improve their writing. Their teachers and the National Writing Project deserve credit for this enthusiasm. The National Writing Project is an excellent small investment from which children and our country reap enormous benefits. I ask my colleagues to continue such projects across the country by voting "no" on the Miller amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from Michigan and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education, Mr. KILDEE, for purposes of clarification.

I would like to clarify that a State could utilize the waiver provisions under Part D of Title IX for purposes of obtaining waivers of requirements under Subpart 2 of Part D of Title I—Improved Education for Disadvantaged Children.

It has come to my attention that there are States which have a system for the incarceration of delinquent youth which would not make the operation of the local program authorized under this subpart feasible. In such instances, I believe States should be able to apply for and receive a waiver. It has never been my intention to change the way States and localities deal with the incarceration of delinquent children and youth. Rather, I meant to improve the quality and kinds of services provided to delinquent youth in order to enhance the prospects of their return to and successful completion of school.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes, the gentleman is correct. The State could utilize the waiver provisions under our language.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. MICHEL

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. MICHEL:

—Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

SEC. 101. AMENDMENTS TO THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965.

The Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

"This Act may be cited as the "Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965".

"TITLE I—HELPING CHILDREN IN NEED MEET HIGH STANDARDS

"SEC. 1001. DECLARATION OF POLICY AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

"(a) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States that a high-quality education for all citizens and a fair and equal opportunity to obtain that education—

"(1) are a societal good necessary for creating a vibrant future for our complex and diverse democracy and for meeting the challenge of an internationally competitive economy;

"(2) are a private good because individual opportunity is greatly enhanced by one's being well educated;

"(3) are a moral imperative in our society; simple justice demands that the opportunity to acquire skills and knowledge deemed necessary for basic citizenship and economic opportunity be equally available to all; and

"(4) improve the life of every citizen, because the quality of our individual lives ultimately depends on the quality of the lives of others.

"(b) RECOGNITION OF NEED.—The Congress recognizes that—

"(1) although the achievement gap between disadvantaged children and other children has been reduced by half over the past two decades, a sizeable gap remains, and many segments of our society lack the opportunity to become well educated;

"(2) the most urgent need for educational improvement is in schools with high concentrations of children from low-income families. Achieving the National Education Goals will not be possible without substantial improvement in these schools;

"(3) educational needs are particularly great for low-achieving children in our highest-poverty schools, children with limited English proficiency, children with disabilities, children of migrant workers, Indian children, children who are neglected or delinquent, and young children and their parents who are in need of family-literacy services; and

"(4) while title I and other programs funded under this Act have contributed to narrowing the achievement gap between children in high-poverty and low-poverty schools, they need to become even more effective in improving high-poverty schools in order to help enable all children to achieve high standards.

"(c) WHAT HAS BEEN LEARNED.—To enable schools to provide all children a high-quality education, this title builds upon what has been learned:

"(1) All children can master challenging content and complex problem-solving skills; research clearly shows that children, including low-achieving children, can succeed when expectations are high and they are given the opportunity to learn challenging material.

"(2) Piecemeal reform, particularly when not tied to an overall vision of teaching to, and helping all children reach, high standards, does not work.

"(3) Use of low-level tests that are not aligned with schools' curricula fails to provide adequate information about what children know and can do and encourages curricula and instruction that focus on low-level skills measured by those tests.

"(4) Resources are less effective when they serve children through such practices as pull-out programs, instead of ensuring that children have full access to effective regular school programs and receive supplemental help through extended-time activities.

"(5) The disproven theory that children must first learn basic skills before engaging in more complex tasks continues to dominate strategies for classroom instruction, resulting in emphasis on repetitive drill and practice at the expense of content-rich instruction, accelerated curricula, and effective teaching to high standards.

"(6) Intensive and sustained professional development for teachers and other school staff—focused on teaching and learning and on helping children attain high standards—is too often not provided.

"(7) Insufficient attention and resources are directed toward the effective use of technology in schools and the role it can play in professional development and improved teaching and learning.

"(8) All parents can contribute to their children's success by helping at home and becoming partners with teachers so that children can achieve high standards.

"(9) Decentralized decisionmaking is a key ingredient of systemic reform. Schools need the resources, flexibility, and responsibility to design and implement effective strategies for bringing their children to high levels of performance and should accept responsibility to do so.

"(10) Opportunities for students to achieve to high standards can be enhanced through a variety of approaches such as public school choice and charter schools.

"(11) Attention to academics alone cannot ensure that all children will reach high standards. The health and other needs of children that affect learning are frequently unmet, particularly in high-poverty schools, thereby necessitating coordination of services to better meet children's needs.

"(d) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to enable schools to provide opportunities for children served to acquire the knowledge and skills contained in the rigorous State content standards and to meet the challenging State performance standards developed for all children under the Goals 2000: Educate America Act or, in their absence, under this title. This purpose shall be accomplished by—

"(1) ensuring high standards for all children and aligning the efforts of States, local educational agencies, and schools to help children served under this title to reach them;

"(2) providing children an enriched and accelerated educational program through schoolwide programs or through additional services that increase the amount and quality of instructional time so that children served under this title receive at least all the classroom instruction that other children receive;

"(3) promoting schoolwide reform and ensuring access of children—from the earliest grades—to effective instructional strategies and challenging academic content that includes intensive complex thinking and problem-solving experiences;

"(4) significantly upgrading the quality of curricula and instruction by providing staff in participating schools with substantial opportunities for intensive and sustained professional development;

"(5) coordinating services under all parts of this title with each other, with other educational services, and, to the extent feasible, with health and social service programs funded from other sources;

"(6) affording parents meaningful opportunities to participate in the education of their children at home and at school;

"(7) distributing resources, in amounts sufficient to make a difference, to areas where needs are greatest;

"(8) improving accountability, as well as teaching and learning, by using State assessment systems designed to measure how well children are achieving high State standards of performance expected of all children; and

"(9) providing greater decisionmaking authority and flexibility to schools in exchange for greater responsibility for student performance.

"SEC. 1002. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"Appropriations are authorized for the following programs and activities under this title:

"(1) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY GRANTS.—For the purpose of carrying out part A of this title, other than section 1118(e), there are authorized to be appropriated $7,000,000,000 for fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996 through 1999.

"(2) EVEN START.—For the purpose of carrying out part B of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated $118,000,000 in fiscal year 1995, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996 through 1999.

"(3) EDUCATION OF MIGRATORY CHILDREN.—For the purpose of carrying out part C of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"(4) EDUCATION FOR NEGLECTED OR DELINQUENT YOUTH.—For the purpose of carrying out part D of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"(5) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—For the purpose of carrying out section 1118(e) of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"(6) SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.—For the purpose of carrying out the activities authorized in sections 1119(b)(1), (b)(2), and (e) of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"(7) FEDERAL ACTIVITIES.—(A) For the purpose of carrying out section 1501 of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"(B) For the purpose of carrying out section 1502 of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1995 through 1999.

"PART A—MAKING HIGH-POVERTY SCHOOLS WORK

"Subpart 1—Basic Program Requirements

"SEC. 1111. STATE PLANS.

"(a) PLANS REQUIRED.—(1) Any State desiring to receive a grant under this part shall submit to the Secretary a plan, developed in consultation with local educational agencies, teachers, administrators, and parents, that—

"(A)(i) is integrated with the State's plan, either approved or being developed, under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, and satisfies the requirements of this section that are not already addressed by that State plan; and

"(ii) is integrated with other State plans, if any, under the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1993 and the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act, to the extent that these plans have not already been incorporated in the State's plan under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act; or

"(B) if the State does not have an approved plan under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act and is not developing such a plan—

"(i) is integrated with other State plans under this Act and other plans, including those under the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1993 and the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act, where such plans exist; and

"(ii) satisfies the requirements of this section.

"(2) The plan may be submitted as part of a consolidated application under section 9302.

"(3) A State may satisfy all or part of the requirements of this section by referencing applicable sections of its approved State plan under title III of the Goals 2000: Educate America Act.

"(b) STANDARDS AND ASSESSMENT PROVISIONS.—(1)(A) Each State plan shall demonstrate that the State has developed or adopted high-quality standards for children served under this title that will be used by the State, its local educational agencies, and its schools to carry out this Act and that these standards be as challenging and of the same high-quality as they are for all children. These standards shall include—

"(i) challenging content standards in the core academic subjects that—

"(I) specify what children served under this title are expected to know and be able to do;

"(II) contain coherent and rigorous content; and

"(III) emphasize the teaching of advanced skills;

"(ii) challenging performance standards that—

"(I) are aligned with the State's content standards;

"(II) describe two levels of high performance, 'proficient' and 'advanced', that determine how well children served under this title are mastering the material in the content standards; and

"(III) include a third benchmark below proficient, if necessary, to provide complete information about the progress of the lower-performing children toward achieving the high 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards.

"(B) For those core academic subjects in which a State has not adopted challenging content and performance standards, the State plan shall include a schedule for their development that includes the completion of standards in mathematics and reading/language arts by the end of the interim period as described in paragraph (7).

"(2)(A) Each State plan shall demonstrate, based on assessments described under paragraph (3), what constitutes adequate yearly progress of—

"(i) any school served under this part toward enabling children to meet the State's 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards; and

"(ii) any local educational agency that received funds under this part toward enabling children in schools receiving assistance under this part to meet the State's 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards.

"(B) Adequate yearly progress shall be defined in a manner—

"(i) that is consistent with criteria of general applicability established by the Secretary and results in continuous and substantial yearly improvement for economically disadvantaged, limited-English proficient, and all students under this title in each school and local educational agency toward the goal of all children under this title meeting the State's challenging 'advanced' performance standards; and

"(ii) links progress primarily to performance on the assessments carried out under this section while permitting progress to be established in part through the use of other outcome-based measures such as reductions in drop-out rates.

"(3) Each State plan shall demonstrate that the State has developed or adopted a set of high-quality, yearly student assessments that will be used as the primary means of determining the yearly performance of each local educational agency and school receiving assistance under this part in enabling children served under this title to meet the State's performance standards and that these assessments be challenging and of the same high-quality as they are for all children. These assessments shall—

"(A) be aligned with the State's challenging content and performance standards and provide coherent information about student attainment of such standards;

"(B) be used for purposes for which they are valid and reliable, and be consistent with relevant nationally recognized professional and technical standards of assessments;

"(C) measure the proficiency of students in the core academic subjects in which a State has adopted challenging content and performance standards and be administered at some time during—

"(i) grades 3 through 5;

"(ii) grades 6 through 9;

"(iii) grades 10 through 12.

"(D) be comprised of multiple, up-to-date measures of student performance;

"(E)(i) include limited-English proficient students who shall be assessed, to the extent practicable in the language and form most likely to yield accurate and reliable information on what these students know and can do, to determine their mastery of skills in subjects other than English;

"(1) convene an annual meeting, at a convenient time, to which all parents of participating children shall be invited and encouraged to attend, to inform parents of their school's participation under this part and to explain this part, its requirements, and their right to be involved;

"(2) involve parents, in an organized, ongoing, and timely way, in the planning, review, and improvement of programs under this part, including the development of the school plan under section 1114 or 1115. If a school has in place a process for involving parents in the planning and design of its programs, the school may use that process, provided that it includes an adequate representation of parents of participating children; and

"(3) provide parents of participating children—

"(A) timely information about programs under this part;

"(B) school performance profiles required under section 1119(a)(2);

"(C) opportunities for regular meetings to formulate suggestions, if such parents so desire; and

"(D) timely responses to their recommendations.

"(d) SHARED RESPONSIBILITIES FOR HIGH STUDENT PERFORMANCE.—As a component of the school-level parental involvement plan developed under subsection (b), each school served under this part shall jointly develop with parents for all children a school-parent compact that outlines how parents, the entire school staff, and students will share the responsibility for improved student achievement and the means by which the school and parents will build and develop a partnership to help children achieve the State's high standards. Such compact shall—

"(1) describe the school's responsibility to provide high-quality curriculum and instruction in a supportive and effective learning environment that enable the children to meet the State's challenging performance standards, and the ways in which each parent will be responsible for supporting his or her children's learning, including monitoring attendance, homework completion, television watching, and positive use of extracurricular time; and

"(2) address the importance of communication between teachers and parents on an ongoing basis through at least—

"(A) parent-teacher conferences in elementary schools, at least annually, during which the compact shall be discussed as it relates to the individual child's achievement;

"(B) frequent reports to parents on their children's progress; and

"(C) reasonable access to staff and observation of classroom activities.

"(e) BUILDING CAPACITY FOR INVOLVEMENT.—To ensure effective involvement of parents and to support a partnership among the school, parents, and the community to improve student achievement, each school and local educational agency shall—

"(1) provide assistance to participating parents in such areas as understanding the National Education Goals, the State's content and performance standards, State and local assessments, the requirements of this part, and how to monitor their children's progress and work with educators to improve the performance of their children;

"(2) provide materials and training, including necessary literacy training that is not otherwise available from other sources to help parents work with their children to improve their children's achievement;

"(3) educate teachers, principals and other staff in the value and utility of contributions of parents, and in how to reach out to, communicate with, and work with parents as equal partners, implement and coordinate parent programs, and build ties between home and school; and

"(4) develop appropriate roles for community-based organizations and businesses in parent involvement activities, including providing information about opportunities for them to work with parents and schools.

"(f) ACCESSIBILITY.—In carrying out the parental involvement requirements of this part, local educational agencies and schools shall, to the extent practicable, provide full opportunities for participation to parents with limited English proficiency or with disabilities, including providing information in a language and form they understand.

"SEC. 1118. PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN ENROLLED IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

(a) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—(1) To the extent consistent with the number of eligible children identified according to section 1115(b) in a local educational agency who are enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, a local educational agency shall, after timely and meaningful consultation with appropriate private school officials, provide such children, on an equitable basis, special educational services or other benefits under this part.

"(2) The educational services or other benefits, including materials and equipment, must be secular, neutral, and nonideological.

"(3) Educational services and other benefits for such private school children shall be equitable in comparison to services and other benefits for public school children participating under this part.

"(4) Expenditures for educational services and other benefits to eligible private school children shall be equal to the proportion of funds allocated to participating school attendance areas based on the number of children from low-income families who attend private schools.

"(5) The local educational agency may provide such services directly or through contracts with public and private agencies, organizations, and institutions.

"(b) CONSULTATION.—(1) To ensure timely and meaningful consultation, a local educational agency shall consult with appropriate private school officials during the design and development of the agency's programs under this part, on issues such as—

"(A) how the children's needs will be identified;

"(B) what services will be offered;

"(C) how and where the services will be provided; and

"(D) how the services will be assessed.

"(2) Consultation shall occur before the local educational agency makes any decision that affects the opportunities of eligible private school children to participate in programs under this part.

"(3) Consultation shall include a discussion of the full range of service delivery mechanisms a local educational agency could use to provide equitable services to eligible private school children including, but not limited to, instruction provided at public school sites, at neutral sites, and in mobile vans, computer-assisted instruction, extended-day services, home tutoring, and instruction provided with take-home computers.

"(c) PUBLIC CONTROL OF FUNDS.—(1) The control of funds provided under this part, and title to materials, equipment, and property purchased with those funds, shall be in a public agency, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property.

"(2)(A) The provision of services under this section shall be provided—

"(i) by employees of a public agency; or

"(ii) through contract by such public agency with an individual, association, agency, or organization.

"(B) In the provision of such services, such employee, person, association, agency, or organization shall be independent of such private school and of any religious organization, and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency.

"(d) STANDARDS FOR A BYPASS.—If a local educational agency is prohibited by law from providing for the participation on an equitable basis of eligible children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools or if the Secretary determines that a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for such participation, as required by this section, the Secretary shall—

"(1) waive the requirements of this section for such local educational agency; and

"(2) arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements that shall be subject to the requirements of this section and sections 9505 and 9506 of this Act.

"(e) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—(1)(A) From the amount appropriated for this subsection under section 1002(e) for any fiscal year, each State is eligible to receive an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount so appropriated as the number of private school children who received services under this part in the State in the most recent year for which data satisfactory to the Secretary are available bears to the number of such children in all States in that same year.

"(B) The Secretary shall reallocate any amounts allocated under subparagraph (A) that are not used by a State for the purpose of this subsection to other States on the basis of their respective needs, as determined by the Secretary.

"(2)(A) A local educational agency may apply to the State educational agency for payments for capital expenses consistent with this subsection.

"(B) State educational agencies shall distribute such funds to local educational agencies based on the degree of need set forth in their respective applications.

"(3) Any funds appropriated to carry out this subsection shall be used only for capital expenses incurred to provide equitable services for private school children under this section.

"(4) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'capital expenses' is limited to—

"(A) expenditures for noninstructional goods and services, such as the purchase, lease, or renovation of real and personal property, including, but not limited to, mobile educational units and leasing of neutral sites or spaces;

"(B) insurance and maintenance costs;

"(C) transportation; and

"(D) other comparable goods and services.

"SEC. 1119. ASSESSMENT AND SCHOOL AND DISTRICT IMPROVEMENT.

"(a) LOCAL REVIEW.—Each local educational agency receiving funds under this part shall—

"(1) use the State assessments described in the State plan and any additional measures described in the local educational agency's plan to review annually the progress of each school served under this part to determine whether the school is meeting, or making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(i) toward enabling its students to meet, the State's performance standards;

"(2) publicize and disseminate to teachers, parents, students, and the community the results of the annual review under paragraph (1) of all schools served under this part in individual school performance profiles that include disaggregated results as required by section 1111(b)(3)(G); and

"(3) provide the results of the local annual review to schools so that they can continually refine the program of instruction to help all children in those schools meet the State's high performance standards.

"(b) DISTINGUISHED SCHOOLS.—(1) Each State shall designate as a Distinguished School—

"(A) any school served under this part that, for three consecutive years, has exceeded the State's definition of adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(i); and

"(B) any school in which virtually all students have met the State's 'advanced' performance standards.

"(2)(A) A State shall use funds available under section 1002(f) to recognize Distinguished Schools, including making monetary awards.

"(B) Funds awarded to a Distinguished School may be used by the school to further its educational program under this part, provide additional incentives for continued success, and reward individuals or groups in the school for past performance.

"(3) A local educational agency may also recognize the success of a Distinguished School by providing additional institutional and individual rewards, such as greater decisionmaking authority at the school building level, increased access to resources or supplemental services such as summer programs that may be used to sustain or increase success, additional professional development opportunities, opportunities to participate in special projects, and individual financial bonuses.

"(4) Schools designated as Distinguished Schools under paragraph (1) may serve as models and provide additional assistance to other schools served under this part that are not making adequate progress.

"(c) SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.—(1) A local educational agency shall identify for school improvement any school served under this part that—

"(A) has been in program improvement under section 1020 of chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as in effect before the effective date of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1993, for at least two consecutive school years prior to that date;

"(B) has not made adequate progress as defined in the State's plan under section 1111(b)(2)(A)(i) for two consecutive school years and if it does not have virtually all students meeting the State's 'advanced' performance standards; or

"(C) has failed to meet the criteria established by the State through its interim procedure under section 1111(b)(5)(C) for two consecutive years.

"(2)(A) Each school identified under paragraph (1) shall—

"(i) in consultation with parents, the local educational agency, and, for schoolwide programs, the school support team, revise its school plan under section 1114 or 1115 in ways that have the greatest likelihood of improving the performance of participating children in meeting the State's performance standards; and

"(ii) submit the revised plan to the local educational agency for approval.

"(B) During the first year immediately following identification under paragraph (1), the school shall implement its revised plan.

"(3) For each school identified under paragraph (1), the local educational agency shall provide technical assistance as the school develops and implements its revised plan.

"(4)(A) The local educational agency may take corrective action at any time against a school that has been identified under paragraph (1), but, during the third year following identification under paragraph (1), shall take such action against any school that still fails to make adequate progress.

"(B) Corrective actions are those listed in the local educational agency plan adopted in compliance with State law, which may include, but are not limited to, decreasing decisionmaking authority at the school level; making alternative governance arrangements such as the creation of a charter school; reconstituting the school staff; withholding funds; and authorizing students to transfer, including paying transportation costs, to other schools in the local educational agency.

"(C)(i) At any time after a school has been identified under paragraph (1), the local education agency may authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school receiving funds under this title.

"(ii) During the third and subsequent years following the identification of a school under paragraph (1), the local education agency shall authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school receiving funds under this title.

"(iii) Funds allocated for a student under this title shall follow such student when transferring to another school.

"(5) The State educational agency shall—

"(A) make assistance from Distinguished Educators under subsection (e) available to the schools farthest from meeting the State's standards, if requested by the school or local educational agency; and

"(B) if it determines that a local educational agency failed to carry out its responsibility under paragraphs (3) and (4), take such corrective actions that it deems appropriate.

"(6) Schools that for at least two of the three years following identification under paragraph (1) make adequate progress toward meeting the State's 'proficient' and 'advanced' performance standards no longer need to be identified for school improvement.

"(d) STATE REVIEW AND LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY IMPROVEMENT.—(1) A State educational agency shall—

"(A) annually review the progress of each local educational agency receiving funds under this part to determine whether it is making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii) toward meeting the State's performance standards; and

"(B) publicize and disseminate to teachers, parents, students, and the community the results of the State review, including disaggregated results, as required by section 1111(b)(3)(F).

"(2) In the case of a local educational agency that for three consecutive years has exceeded the State's definition of adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii), the State may make institutional and individual rewards of the kinds described for individual schools in subsection (b)(3).

"(3) A State educational agency shall identify for improvement any local educational agency that—

"(A) for two consecutive years, is not making adequate progress as defined in section 1111(b)(2)(A)(ii) toward meeting the State's performance standards; or

"(B) has failed to meet the criteria established by the State through its interim procedure under section 1111(b)(5)(C) for two consecutive years.

"(4) Each local educational agency identified under paragraph (3) shall, in consultation with schools, parents, and educational experts, revise its district-level plan under section 1112 in ways that have the greatest likelihood of improving the performance of its schools in meeting the State's performance standards.

"(5) For each local educational agency identified under paragraph (3), the State educational agency shall—

"(A) provide technical assistance to better enable the local educational agency to develop and implement its revised plan and work with schools needing improvement; and

"(B) make available to the districts farthest from meeting the State's standards, if requested, assistance from Distinguished Educators under subsection (e).

"(6)(A) The State educational agency may take corrective action at any time against a local educational agency that has been identified under paragraph (3), but, during the fourth year following identification under paragraph (3), shall take such action against any local educational agency that still fails to make adequate progress.

"(B) Corrective actions are those listed in the local educational agency plan adopted in compliance with State law, which may include, but are not limited to, reconstitution of district personnel; appointment by the State educational agency of a receiver or trustee to administer the affairs of the local educational agency in place of the superintendent and school board; removal of particular schools from the jurisdiction of the local educational agency and establishment of alternative arrangements for governing and supervising such schools; the abolition or restructuring of the local educational agency; and the withholding of funds.

"(C)(i) At any time after a local education agency has been identified under paragraph (3), the State may authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school in another local agency receiving funds under this title.

"(ii) During the fourth and subsequent years following the identification of a local education agency under paragraph (3), the State shall authorize students eligible for assistance under this title to transfer to another public school in another local education agency receiving funds under this title.

"(iii) Funds allocated for a student under this title shall follow such student when transferring to another school.

"(7) Local educational agencies that for at least two of the three years following identification under paragraph (3) make adequate progress toward meeting the State's standards no longer need to be identified for district improvement.

"(e) DISTINGUISHED EDUCATORS.—(1) In order to provide assistance to schools and local educational agencies identified as needing improvement under subsection (c) or (d), each State, using funds available under section 1002(f), shall establish a corps of Distinguished Educators.

"(2) When possible, these Distinguished Educators shall be chosen from schools served under this part that have been especially successful in enabling children to meet or make outstanding progress toward meeting the State's performance standards, such as those schools described in subsection (b).

"(3) Distinguished Educators shall provide, upon request, intensive and sustained assistance to the schools and districts farthest from meeting the State's standards as they revise and implement their plans.

"(4) If the State has devised an alternative approach to providing such intensive and sustained assistance to schools and districts farthest from meeting the State's standards, this approach shall meet the requirements of this subsection subject to the approval of the Secretary as part of the State plan.

"(f) STATE ALLOCATIONS FOR SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.—From the amount appropriated under section 1002(f) for any fiscal year, each State shall be eligible to receive an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount appropriated as the amount allocated to the State under sections 1123 and 1124 bears to the total amount allocated to all States under those sections, except that each State shall receive at least $180,000, or $30,000 in the case of Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Marianas, and Palau (until the Compact of Free Association goes into effect).

"SEC. 1120. FISCAL REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—A local educational agency may receive funds under this part for any fiscal year only if the State educational agency finds that the local educational agency has maintained its fiscal effort in accordance with section 9501 of this Act, including such effort for professional development activities.

"(b) FEDERAL FUNDS TO SUPPLEMENT, NOT SUPPLANT, NON-FEDERAL FUNDS.—(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a State or local educational agency shall use funds received under this part only to supplement the amount of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available from non-Federal sources for the education of pupils participating in programs assisted under this part, and not to supplant such funds.

"(B) For the purpose of complying with subparagraph (A), a State or local educational agency may exclude supplemental State and local funds expended in any eligible school attendance area or school for programs that meet the requirements of section 1114 or 1115.

"(2) No local educational agency shall be required to provide services under this part through a particular instructional method or in a particular instructional setting in order to demonstrate its compliance with paragraph (1).

"(c) COMPARABILITY OF SERVICES.—(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraphs (4) and (5), a local educational agency may receive funds under this part only if State and local funds will be used in schools served under this part to provide services that, taken as a whole, are at least comparable to services in schools that are not receiving funds under this part.

"(B) If the local educational agency is serving all of its schools under this part, such agency may receive funds under this part only if it will use State and local funds to provide services that, taken as a whole, are substantially comparable in each school.

"(C) A local educational agency may meet the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) on a grade-span by grade-span basis or a school-by-school basis.

"(2)(A) To meet the requirements of paragraph (1), a local educational agency shall demonstrate that—

"(i) expenditures per pupil from State and local funds in each school served under this part are equal to or greater than the average expenditures per pupil in schools not receiving services under this part; or

"(ii) it has adopted a districtwide salary schedule.

"(B) A local educational agency need not include unpredictable changes in student enrollment or personnel assignments that occur after the beginning of a school year in determining comparability of services under this subsection.

"(3) Each local educational agency shall—

"(A) develop procedures for compliance with this subsection; and

"(B) maintain records that are updated biennially documenting its compliance.

"(4) This subsection shall not apply to a local educational agency that does not have more than one building for each grade span.

"(5) For the purpose of determining compliance with paragraph (1), a local educational agency may exclude State and local funds expended for—

"(A) bilingual education for children of limited English proficiency; and

"(B) excess costs of providing services to children with disabilities.

"Subpart 2—Allocations

"SEC. 1122. GRANTS FOR THE OUTLYING AREAS AND THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

"(a) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—From the amount appropriated for payments to States for any fiscal year under section 1002(a), the Secretary shall reserve a total of 1 percent to provide assistance to—

"(1) the outlying areas on the basis of their respective need for such assistance according to such criteria as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this part; and

"(2) the Secretary of the Interior in the amount necessary to make payments pursuant to subsection (b).

"(b) ALLOTMENT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—

"(1) The amount allotted for payments to the Secretary of the Interior under subsection (a)(2) for any fiscal year shall be, as determined pursuant to criteria established by the Secretary, the amount necessary to meet the special educational needs of—

"(A) Indian children on reservations served by elementary and secondary schools for Indian children operated or supported by the Department of the Interior; and

"(B) out-of-State Indian children in elementary and secondary schools in local educational agencies under special contracts with the Department of the Interior.

"(2) From the amount allotted for payments to the Secretary of the Interior under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary of the Interior shall make payments to local educational agencies, upon such terms as the Secretary of Education determines will best carry out the purposes of this part, with respect to out-of-State Indian children described in paragraph (1). The amount of such payment may not exceed, for each such child, the greater of—

"(A) 40 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the State in which the agency is located; or

"(B) 48 percent of such expenditure in the United States.

"SEC. 1123. ALLOCATIONS TO STATES.

"(a) GENERAL.—For each fiscal year, an amount of the appropriations for this part equal to the appropriation for fiscal year 1994 for part A of chapter 1, title I, Elementary and Secondary Education Act, shall be allocated in accordance with sections 1124 and 1124A. Any additional appropriations for this part for any fiscal year, after application of the preceding sentence, shall be allocated in accordance with section 1125.

"(b) ADJUSTMENTS WHERE NECESSITATED BY APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) If the sums available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all local educational agencies in States are eligible to receive under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 for such year, the Secretary shall ratably reduce the allocations to such local educational agencies, subject to subsections (c) and (d) of this section.

"(2) If additional funds become available for making payments under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 for such fiscal year, allocations that were reduced under paragraph (1) shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"(c) HOLD-HARMLESS AMOUNTS.—Notwithstanding subsection (b), the total amount made available to each local educational agency under each of sections 1124 and 1125 for any fiscal year shall be at least 85 percent of the total amount such local educational agency was allocated under such sections (or, for fiscal year 1995, their predecessor authorities) for the preceding fiscal year.

"(d) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this section and sections 1124 and 1125, the term State means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"SEC. 1124. BASIC GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

"(1) GRANTS FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES AND PUERTO RICO.—

"(A) The grant which a local educational agency in a State is eligible to receive under this subpart for a fiscal year shall (except as provided in section 1126), be determined by multiplying the number of children counted under subsection (c) by 40 percent of the amount determined under the next sentence. The amount determined under this sentence shall be the average per pupil expenditure in the State except that (i) if the average per pupil expenditure in the State is less than 80 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, such amount shall be 80 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, or (ii) if the average per pupil expenditure in the State is more than 120 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States, such amount shall be 120 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States. For each local educational agency serving an area with a total population of at least 20,000 persons, the grant under this section shall be the amount determined by the Secretary. For local educational agencies serving areas with total population of fewer than 20,000 persons, the State education agency may either (I) distribute to such local educational agencies grants under this section equal to the amounts determined by the Secretary; or (II) use an alternative method, approved by the Secretary, to distribute the share of the State's total grants under this section that is based on local educational agencies with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. Such an alternative method of distributing grants under this section among a State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons shall be based upon population data that the State education agency determines best reflect the current distribution of children in poor families among the State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. If a local educational agency serving an area with total population of less than 20,000 persons is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State education agency, then it may appeal this determination to the Secretary. The Secretary must respond to this appeal within 45 days of receipt. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Commerce regarding whether available data on population for local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons are sufficiently reliable to be used to determine final grants to such areas.

"(B) If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. In such cases, subject to section 1126, the grant for any local educational agency in such an area of a State shall be determined on the basis of the aggregate amount of such grants for all such agencies in the county or counties in which the school district of the particular agency is located, which aggregate amount shall be equal to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A) for such county or counties, and shall be allocated among those agencies upon such equitable basis as may be determined by the State educational agency in accordance with basic criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

"(C) For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall determine the percentage which the average per pupil expenditure in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is of the lowest average per pupil expenditure of any of the 50 States. The grant which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be eligible to receive under this subpart for a fiscal year shall be the amount arrived at by multiplying the number of children counted under subsection (c) for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico by the product of—

"(i) the percentage determined under the preceding sentence; and

"(ii) 32 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States.

"(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'State' does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and Palau.

"(b) MINIMUM NUMBER OF CHILDREN TO QUALIFY.—A local educational agency shall be eligible for a basic grant for a fiscal year under this subpart only if the number of children counted under subsection (c) in the school district of such local educational agency is at least 10.

"(c) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—

"(1) CATEGORIES OF CHILDREN.—The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section is the aggregate of—

"(A) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of the local educational agency from families below the poverty level as determined under paragraph (2)(A),

"(B) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency from families above the poverty level as determined under paragraph (2)(B), and

"(C) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency in institutions for neglected and delinquent children (other than such institutions operated by the United States) or attending community day programs for such children, but not counted pursuant to subpart 3 of part D for the purposes of a grant to a State agency, or being supported in foster homes with public funds.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—

"(A) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, from families below the poverty level on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available from the Department of Commerce for local educational agencies (as produced and published under section 181a of title 13, United States Code). If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. The District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be treated as individual local educational agencies. If a local educational agency contains two or more counties in their entirety, then each county will be treated as if it were a separate local educational agency for purposes of calculating grants under this part. The total of grants for such counties shall be allocated to such a local educational agency, which shall distribute to schools in each county within it a share of the local educational agency's total grant that is no less than the county's share of the population counts used to calculate the local educational agency's grant. If the Department of Commerce has updated data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use the updated data. In determining the families which are below the poverty level, the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census, in such form as those criteria have been updated by increases in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"(B) For purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, from families above the poverty level on the basis of the number of such children from families receiving an annual income, in excess of the current criteria of poverty, from payments under the program of aid to families with dependent children under a State plan approved under title IV of the Social Security Act; and in making such determinations the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census for a family of 4 in such form as those criteria have been updated by increases in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The Secretary shall determine the number of such children and the number of children of such ages living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children, or being supported in foster homes with public funds, on the basis of the caseload data for the month of October of the preceding fiscal year (using, in the case of children described in the preceding sentence, the criteria of poverty and the form of such criteria required by such sentence which were determined for the calendar year preceding such month of October) or, to the extent that such data are not available to the Secretary before January of the calendar year in which the Secretary's determination is made, then on the basis of the most recent reliable data available to the Secretary at the time of such determination. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall collect and transmit the information required by this subparagraph to the Secretary not later than January 1 of each year.

"(C) When requested by the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce shall make a special updated estimate of the number of children of such ages who are from families below the poverty level (as determined under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph) in each school district, and the Secretary is authorized to pay (either in advance or by way of reimbursement) the Secretary of Commerce the cost of making this special estimate. The Secretary of Commerce shall give consideration to any request of the chief executive of a State for the collection of additional census information. For purposes of this section, the Secretary shall consider all children who are in correctional institutions to be living in institutions for delinquent children.

"(d) STATE MINIMUM.—

"(1) The aggregate amount allotted for all local educational agencies within a State may not be less than one-quarter of 1 percent of the total amount available for such fiscal year under this section.

"(2)(A) No State shall, by reason of the application of the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, be allotted more than—

"(i) 150 percent of the amount that the State received in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or

"(ii) the amount calculated under subparagraph (B), whichever is less.

"(B) For the purpose of subparagraph (A)(ii), the amount for each State equals—

"(i) the number of children in such State counted under subsection (c) in the fiscal year specified in subparagraph (A), multiplied by

"(ii) 150 percent of the national average per pupil payment made with funds available under this section for that year.

"SEC. 1124A. CONCENTRATION GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

"(1)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, each local educational agency, in a State other than Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and Palau, which is eligible for a grant under this part for any fiscal year shall be entitled to an additional grant under this section for that fiscal year if:

"(i) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) of this part in the local educational agency for the preceding fiscal year exceeds 6,500, or

"(ii) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) exceeds 15 percent of the total number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in the local educational agency in that fiscal year.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), no State described in subparagraph (A) shall receive less than—

"(i) one-quarter of 1 percent of the sums appropriated under paragraph (6) of this section for such fiscal year; or

"(ii) $250,000, whichever is higher.

"(C) No State shall, by reason of the application of the provisions of subparagraph (B)(i) of this paragraph, be allotted more than—

"(i) 150 percent of the amount that the State received in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the determination is made, or

"(ii) the amount calculated under subparagraph (D), whichever is less.

"(D) For the purpose of subparagraph (C), the amount for each State equals—

"(i) the number of children in such State counted for purposes of this section in the fiscal year specified in subparagraph (B), multiplied by

"(ii) 150 percent of the national average per pupil payment made with funds available under this section for that year.

"(2) For each local educational agency eligible to receive an additional grant under this section for any fiscal year the Secretary shall determine the product of—

"(A) the greater of—

"(i) the number of children in excess of 6,500 counted under section 1124(c) for the preceding fiscal year, in a local educational agency which qualifies on the basis of subparagraph (A)(i) of paragraph (1); or

"(ii) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) for the preceding fiscal year in a local educational agency which qualifies on the basis of subparagraph (A)(ii) of paragraph (1); and

"(B) the quotient resulting from the division of the amount determined for those agencies under section 1124(a)(1) for the fiscal year for which the determination is being made divided by the total number of children counted under section 1124(c) for that agency for the preceding fiscal year.

"(3) The amount of the additional grant to which an eligible local educational agency is entitled under this section for any fiscal year shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount reserved under paragraph (6) for that fiscal year as the product determined under paragraph (2) for such local educational agency for that fiscal year bears to the sum of such products for all local educational agencies in the United States for that fiscal year.

"(4) For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children counted under section 1124(c) for any local educational agency, and the total number of children aged five to seventeen, inclusive, in local educational agencies, on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available at the time the payment for such local educational agency is determined under section 1124.

"(5)(A) For each local educational agency serving an area with a total population of at least 20,000 persons, the grant under this section shall be the amount determined by the Secretary. For local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons, the State education agency may either (i) distribute to such local educational agencies grants under this section equal to the amounts determined by the Secretary; or (ii) use an alternative method, approved by the Secretary, to distribute the share of the State's total grants under this section that is based on local educational agencies with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. Such an alternative method of distributing grants under this section among a State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons shall be based upon population data that the State education agency determines best reflects the current distribution of children in poor families among the State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons and meeting the eligibility criteria of paragraph (1)(A). If a local educational agency serving an area with total population of less than 20,000 persons is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State education agency, then it may appeal this determination to the Secretary. The Secretary must respond to this appeal within 45 days of receipt. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Commerce regarding whether available data on population for local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons are sufficiently reliable to be used to determine final grants to such areas meeting the eligibility criteria of paragraph (1)(A).

"(B) If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. In such cases, subject to section 1126, the grant for any local educational agency in such an area of a State shall be determined on the basis of the aggregate amount of such grants for all such agencies in the county or counties in which the school district of the particular agency is located, which aggregate amount shall be equal to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A) for such county or counties, and shall be allocated among those agencies upon such equitable basis as may be determined by the State educational agency in accordance with the basic criteria prescribed by the Secretary.

"(b) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—Of the total amount of funds available for sections 1124 and 1124A, 10 percent of the amount appropriated for that fiscal year shall be available to carry out this section.

"(c) RATABLE REDUCTION RULE.—If the sums available under subsection (b) for any fiscal year for making payments under this section are not sufficient to pay in full the total amounts which all States are entitled to receive under subsection (a) for such fiscal year, the maximum amounts which all States are entitled to receive under subsection (a) for such fiscal year shall be ratably reduced. In case additional funds become available for making such payments for any fiscal year during which the preceding sentence is applicable, such reduced amounts shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"SEC. 1125. TARGETED GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) ELIGIBILITY OF LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—A local educational agency in a State is eligible to receive a targeted grant under this section for any fiscal year if the number of children in the local educational agency under subsection 1124(c), before application of the weighting factor, is at least 10.

"(b) Grants for Local Educational Agencies, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.—(1) The amount of the grant that a local educational agency in a State or that the District of Columbia is eligible to receive under this section for any fiscal year shall be the product of—

"(A) the number of children counted under subsection (c); and

"(B) the amount in the second sentence of subparagraph 1124(a)(1)(A).

"(2) For each fiscal year, the amount of the grant for which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is eligible under this section shall be equal to the number of children counted under subsection (c) for Puerto Rico, multiplied by the amount determined in subparagraph 1124(a)(1)(C).

"(c) Children To Be Counted.—

"(1) Categories of children.—The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section shall be the number counted in subsection 1124(c) multiplied by the weighting factor for the local educational agency. The weighting factor shall be established on the basis of the percentage that the number of children counted under section 1124(c) represents of the total population aged 5–17 years in the local educational agency or the number of such children. Weighted pupil counts will be calculated based upon both percentage and number and the larger of the two counts will be used in calculating grants for each local educational agency. Weighting factors shall be assigned according to the following scale: if the percentage is greater than 0 but less than 14.265, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted in section 1124(c); if the percentage is greater than 14.265 but less than 21.553, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population and 1.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 14.265 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 21.553 percent but less than 29.223 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, and 2.00 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 21.553 percent of the total school age population; if the percentage is greater than 29.223 percent but less than 36.538 percent, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.67 percent of the total school age population, and 2.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 29.223 percent of the total school age population; and if the percentage is greater than 36.538, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 14.265 percent of the total school age population, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.288 percent of the total school age population, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 7.67 percent of the total school age population, 2.50 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 7.315 percent of the total school age population, and 3.00 for children counted in section 1124(c) in excess of 36.538 percent of the total school age population. Separately, if the number of children counted under section 1124(c) is greater than 0 but less than 575, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for all children counted in section 1124(c); if the number is greater than 575 but less than 1,870, the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, and 1.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 575; if the number is greater than 1,870 but less than 6,910, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 1,295, and 2.00 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 1,870; if the number is greater than 6,910 but less than 42,000 then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 1,295, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 5,040, and 2.50 for children counted under section 1124(c) in excess of 6,910; and if the number is greater than 42,000, then the weighting factor shall be 1.00 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 575, 1.50 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 1,295, 2.00 for a number of children counted under section 1124(c) equal to 5,040, 2.50 for a number of children counted in section 1124(c) equal to 35,090 and 3.00 for children counted in section 1124(c) in excess of 42,000. For the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the weighting factor shall be no greater than 1.62.

"(d) Local Educational Agency Allocations.—For each local educational agency serving an area with a total population of at least 20,000 persons, the grant under this section shall be the amount determined by the Secretary. For local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons, the State education agency may either (1) distribute to such local educational agencies grants under this section equal to the amounts determined by the Secretary; or (2) use an alternative method, approved by the Secretary, to distribute the share of the State's total grants under this section that is based on local educational agencies with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. Such an alternative method of distributing grants under this section among a State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons shall be based upon population data that the State education agency determines best reflects the current distribution of children in poor families among the State's local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons. If a local educational agency serving an area with total populations of less than 20,000 persons is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State education agency, then it may appeal this determination to the Secretary. The Secretary must respond to this appeal within 45 days of receipt. If, and only if, there are portions of any of the States for which the Department of Commerce has not prepared data on the number of children, aged 5–17, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies, then the Secretary shall use such data compiled for counties in those portions of the States, treating the counties as if they were local educational agencies. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Commerce regarding whether available data on population for local educational agencies serving areas with total populations of fewer than 20,000 persons are sufficiently reliable to be used to determine final grants to such areas.

"(d) State Minimum.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, from the total amount available for any fiscal year to carry out this section, each State shall be allotted at least the lesser of—

"(1) one quarter of one percent of such amount;

"(2) 150 percent of the national average grant under this section per child described in section 1124(c), without application of a weighting factor, multiplied by the State's total number of children described in section 1124(c), without application of a weighting factor.

"SEC. 1126. SPECIAL ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.

"(a) Allocations for Neglected or Delinquent Children.—(1) If a State educational agency determines that a local educational agency in the State is unable or unwilling to provide for the special educational needs of children who are living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children as described in subparagraph 1124(c)(1)(C), the State educational agency shall, if it assumes responsibility for the special educational needs of such children, receive the portion of such local educational agency's allocation under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 that is attributable to such children.

"(2) If the State educational agency does not assume such responsibility, any other State or local public agency that does assume such responsibility shall receive that portion of the local educational agency's allocation.

"(b) Allocations Among Local Educational Agencies.—The State educational agency may allocate the amounts of grants under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 between and among the affected local educational agencies when—

"(1) two or more local educational agencies serve, in whole or in part, the same geographical area; or

"(2) a local educational agency provides free public education for children who reside in the school district of another local educational agency.

"(c) Reallocation.—If a State educational agency determines that the amount of a grant a local educational agency would receive under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 is more than such local agency will use, the State educational agency shall make the excess amount available to other local educational agencies in the State that need additional funds in accordance with criteria established by the State educational agency.

"SEC. 1127. CARRYOVER AND WAIVER.

"(a) Limitation on Carryover.—Notwithstanding section 412 of the General Education Provisions Act or any other provision of law, not more than 15 percent of the funds allocated to a local educational agency for any fiscal year under this subpart (but not including funds received through any reallocation under this subpart) may remain available for obligation by such agency for one additional fiscal year.

"(b) Waiver.—A State educational agency may, once every three years, waive the percentage limitation in subsection (a) if—

"(1) the agency determines that the request of a local educational agency is reasonable and necessary; or

"(2) supplemental appropriations for this subpart become available.

"(c) Exclusion.—The percentage limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply to any local educational agency that receives less than $50,000 under this subpart for any fiscal year.

"(b) Nominations.—Schools recognized under this program will be selected by the Secretary from a list of nominees. Each State shall select a nominee to be submitted to the Secretary from among schools designated as distinguished schools under section 1119.

"(c) Selection.—The Secretary shall annually convene a panel of experts who will review nominated schools and select those who will receive awards. In addition to Presidential recognition, selected schools will receive a cash award which may be applied without restriction to enhance the educational programs in that schools or to provide cash awards to personnel in the school.

"(a) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a State is entitled to receive its full allocation of funds under this part for any fiscal year if the Secretary finds that either the combined fiscal effort per student or the aggregate expenditures within the State with respect to the provision of free public education for the preceding fiscal year was not less than 90 percent of such combined fiscal effort or aggregate expenditures for the second preceding fiscal year.

"(2) The Secretary shall reduce the amount of the allocation of funds under this part in any fiscal year in the exact proportion to which the State fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) by falling below 90 percent of both the fiscal effort per student and aggregate expenditures (using the measure most favorable to the State), and no such lesser amount shall be used for computing the effort required under paragraph (1) for subsequent years.

"(3) The Secretary may waive, for 1 fiscal year only, the requirements of this subsection if the Secretary determines that such a waiver would be equitable due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances such as a natural disaster or a precipitous and unforeseen decline in the financial resources of the State.

"(b) FEDERAL FUNDS SUPPLEMENTARY.—A State or local educational agency may use and allocate funds received under this part only so as to supplement and, to the extent practical, increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of Federal funds made available under this part, be made available from non-Federal sources, and in no case may such funds be used so as to supplant funds from non-Federal sources.

"SEC. 2252. PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN ENROLLED IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

"(2) If no program or project is carried out under subsection (a)(1) of this section in the school district of a local educational agency, the State educational agency shall make arrangements, such as through contracts with nonprofit agencies or organizations, under which children in private schools in that district are provided with services and materials to the extent that would have occurred if the local educational agency had received funds under this part.

"(3) The requirements of this section relating to the participation of children, teachers, and other personnel serving such children shall apply to programs and projects carried out under this part by a State or local educational agency, whether directly or through grants to or contracts with other public or private agencies, institutions, or organizations.

"(b) EQUAL EXPENDITURES.—Expenditures for programs pursuant to subsection (a) shall be equal (consistent with the number of children to be served) to expenditures for programs under this part for children enrolled in the public schools of the local educational agency, taking into account the needs of the individual children and other factors which relate to such expenditures, and when funds available to a local educational agency under this part are used to concentrate programs or projects on a particular group, attendance area, or grade or age level, children enrolled in private schools who are included within the group, attendance area, or grade or age level selected for such concentration shall, after consultation with the appropriate private school officials, be assured equitable participation in the purposes and benefits of such programs or projects.

"(c) FUNDS.—(1) The control of funds provided under this part, and title to materials, equipment, and property repaired, remodeled, or constructed therewith, shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this part, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property.

"(2) The provision of services pursuant to this section shall be provided by employees of a public agency or through contract by such public agency with a person, an association, agency, or corporation who or which, in the provision of such services, is independent of such private school and of any religious organizations, and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency, and the funds provided under this part shall not be commingled with State or local funds.

"(d) STATE PROHIBITION WAIVER.—If by reason of any provision of law a State or local educational agency is prohibited from providing for the participation in programs of children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools, as required by this section, the Secretary shall waive such requirements and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this section.

"(e) WAIVER AND PROVISION OF SERVICES.—(1) If the Secretary determines that a State or a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for the participation on an equitable basis of children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools as required by this section, the Secretary may waive such requirements and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this section.

"(2) If a State or local educational agency is dissatisfied with the Secretary's final action after a proceeding under paragraph (1) of this subsection, it may, within 60 days after notice of such action, file with the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State is located a petition for review of that action. A copy of the petition shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary. The Secretary thereupon shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary based this action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(3) The findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence and the Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the Secretary's previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(4) Upon the filing of such petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. ### "SEC. 3302. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

"(1) all students can learn to high standards and must develop their talents and realize their potential if the United States is to prosper;

"(2) gifted and talented students are a national resource vital to the future of the Nation and its security and well-being;

"(3) too often schools fail to challenge students to do their best work, and students who are not challenged will not learn to high standards, fully develop their talents, and realize their potential;

"(4) unless the special abilities of gifted and talented students are recognized and developed during their elementary and secondary school years, much of their special potential for contributing to the national interest is likely to be lost;

"(5) gifted and talented students from economically disadvantaged families and areas, and students of limited English proficiency are at greatest risk of being unrecognized and of not being provided adequate or appropriate educational services;

"(6) State and local educational agencies and private nonprofit schools often lack the necessary specialized resources to plan and implement effective programs for the early identification of gifted and talented students for the provision of educational services and programs appropriate to their special needs;

"(7) the Federal Government can best carry out the limited but essential role of stimulating research and development and personnel training and providing a national focal point of information and technical assistance that is necessary to ensure that the Nation's schools are able to meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented students, and thereby serve a profound national interest; and

"(8) the experience and knowledge gained in developing and implementing programs for gifted and talented students can and should be used as a basis to develop a rich and challenging curriculum for all students.

"(b) STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—

"(1) It is the purpose of this part to provide financial assistance to State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations, to initiate a coordinated program of research, demonstration projects, personnel training, and similar activities designed to build a nationwide capability in elementary and secondary schools to meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented students. In addition, the purpose of this part is to encourage the development of rich and challenging curricula for all students through the appropriate application and adaptation of materials and instructional methods developed under this part.

"(2) It is also the purpose of this part to supplement and make more effective the expenditure of State and local funds, for the education of gifted and talented students.

"SEC. 3303. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this part, the term 'gifted and talented students' means children and youth who give evidence of high performance capability in areas such as intellectual, creative, artistic, or leadership capacity, or in specific academic fields, and who require services or activities not ordinarily provided by the school in order to fully develop such capabilities.

"TITLE IV—SAFE AND DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITIES

"SEC. 4001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1994'.

"SEC. 4002. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds as follows:

"(1) National Education Goal Six provides that by the year 2000, all schools in America will be free of drugs and violence and offer a disciplined environment that is conducive to learning.

"(2) The widespread illegal use of alcohol and other drugs among the Nation's secondary school students, and increasingly by students in elementary schools as well, constitutes a grave threat to their physical and mental well-being, and significantly impedes the learning process. For example, data show that students who drink tend to receive lower grades and are more likely to miss school because of illness than students who do not drink.

"(3) Our Nation's schools and communities are increasingly plagued by violence and crime. Approximately three million thefts and violent crimes occur in or near our Nation's schools every year, the equivalent of more than 16,000 incidents per school day. Approximately one of every five high school students now carries a firearm, knife, or club on a regular basis.

"(4) The tragic consequences of violence and the illegal use of alcohol and drugs by students are felt not only by students and their families, but by their communities and the Nation, which can ill afford to lose their skills, talents, and vitality.

"(5) While use of illegal drugs is a serious problem among a minority of teenagers, alcohol use is far more widespread. The proportion of high school students using alcohol, though lower than a decade ago, remains unacceptably high. By the 8th grade, 70 percent of youth report having tried alcohol and by the 12th grade, about 88 percent have used alcohol. Alcohol use by young people can and does have adverse consequences for users, their families, communities, schools, and colleges.

"(6) Drug and violence prevention programs are essential components of a comprehensive strategy to promote school safety and to reduce the demand for and use of drugs throughout the Nation. Schools and local organizations in communities throughout the Nation have a special responsibility to work together to combat the growing epidemic of violence and illegal drug use and should measure the success of their programs against clearly defined goals and objectives.

"(7) Students must take greater responsibility for their own well-being, health, and safety if schools and communities are to achieve their goals of providing a safe, disciplined, and drug-free learning environment.

"SEC. 4003. PURPOSE.

"The purpose of this title is to support programs to meet Goal Six of the National Educational Goals by preventing violence in and around schools and by strengthening programs that prevent the illegal use of alcohol and drugs, involve parents, and are coordinated with related Federal, State, and community efforts and resources, through the provision of Federal assistance to—

"(1) States for grants to local and intermediate educational agencies and consortia to establish, operate, and improve local programs of school drug and violence prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education in elementary and secondary schools (including intermediate and junior high schools);

"(2) States for grants to local and intermediate educational agencies and consortia for grants to, and contracts with, community-based organizations and other public and private non-profit agencies and organizations for programs of drug and violence prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education;

"(3) States for development, training, technical assistance, and coordination activities;

"(4) public and private non-profit organizations to conduct training, demonstrations, and evaluation, and to provide supplementary services for the prevention of drug use and violence among students and youth; and

"(5) institutions of higher education for the development and implementation of model programs and strategies to promote the safety of students attending institutions of higher education by preventing violent behavior and the illegal use of alcohol and drugs by such students.

“(2) the use of magnet schools has increased dramatically since enactment of the magnet program, with approximately 1.4 million students nationwide now attending such schools, of which more than 60 percent of the students are nonwhite;

“(3) magnet schools offer a wide range of distinctive programs that have served as models for school improvement efforts;

“(4) in administering this program, the Federal Government has learned that—

“(A) where magnet programs are implemented for only a portion of a school's student body, special efforts must be made to discourage the isolation of magnet students from other students in the school;

“(B) local educational agencies can maximize their effectiveness in achieving the purposes of this program if they have more flexibility to serve students attending a school who are not enrolled in the magnet school program;

“(C) local educational agencies must be creative in designing magnet schools for students at all academic levels, so that school districts do not skim off only the highest achieving students to attend the magnet schools;

“(D) local educational agencies must seek to enable participation in magnet school programs by students who reside in the neighborhoods where the programs are placed; and

“(E) in order to ensure that magnet schools are sustained after Federal funding ends, the Federal Government must assist local educational agencies to improve their capacity to continue to operate magnet schools at a high level of performance;

“(5) it is in the best interest of the Federal Government to—

“(A) continue its support of local educational agencies implementing court-ordered desegregation plans and local educational agencies seeking to foster meaningful interaction among students of different racial and ethnic backgrounds beginning at the earliest stage of their education;

“(B) ensure that all students have equitable access to quality education that will prepare them to function well in a culturally diverse, technologically-oriented, and highly competitive global community; and

“(4) courses of instruction within magnet schools that will substantially strengthen the knowledge of academic subjects and the grasp of tangible and marketable vocational skills of students attending such schools.

“SEC. 5103. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

"(2) If the Secretary determines for any fiscal year that a local educational agency failed to maintain its fiscal effort at the 90 percent level required by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall—

"(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out subsection (a).

"SEC. 6706. BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS EDUCATION FUNCTIONS.

"(a) The Secretary shall vest in the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs all functions with respect to formulation and establishment of policy and procedure, and supervision of programs and expenditures of Federal funds for the purpose of Indian education administered by the Bureau. The Assistant Secretary shall carry out such functions through the Director of the Office of Indian Education.

"(b) The Director of the Office shall direct and supervise the operations of all personnel directly and substantially involved with provision of education services by the Bureau, including (but not limited to) school or institution custodial or maintenance personnel. The Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs shall provide for the adequate coordination between the affected Bureau Offices and the Office to facilitate the consideration of all contract functions relating to education. Except as required by section 6709(d), nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate support services for Indian education.

"(c) Education personnel who are under the direction and supervision of the Director of the Office in accordance with the first sentence of subsection (b) shall—

"(1) monitor and evaluate Bureau education programs,

"(2) provide all services and support functions for education programs with respect to personnel matters involving staffing actions and functions, and

"(3) provide technical and coordinating assistance in areas such as procurement, contracting, budgeting, personnel, and curriculum.

"(d)(1) The Assistant Secretary shall submit in the annual Budget a plan—

"(A) for school facilities to be constructed under the system required by section 6705(c);

"(B) for establishing priorities among projects and for the improvement and repair of education facilities, which together shall form the basis for the distribution of appropriated funds; and

"(C) including a 5-year plan for capital improvements.

"(2) The Assistant Secretary shall establish a program, including the distribution of appropriated funds, for the operation and maintenance of education facilities. Such program shall include, but not be limited to—

"(A) a method of computing the amount necessary for each education facility;

"(B) similar treatment of all Bureau funded schools;

"(C) a notice of an allocation of appropriated funds from the Director of the Office directly to the appropriate education line officers; and

"(D) a system for the conduct of routine preventive maintenance.

The appropriate education line officers shall make arrangements for the maintenance of education facilities with the local supervisors of the Bureau maintenance personnel who are under the authority of the agency superintendent or area directors, respectively. The local supervisors of Bureau maintenance personnel shall take appropriate action to implement the decisions made in this regard by the appropriate education line officers, except that no funds from this program may be authorized for expenditure unless such appropriate education line officer is assured that the necessary maintenance has been, or will be, provided in a reasonable manner. Subject to the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate operations and maintenance personnel for the Office.

"(3) The requirements of this subsection shall be implemented no later than July 1, 1995.

"(e) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, the Director shall promulgate guidelines for the establishment of mechanisms for the acceptance of gifts and bequests for the use of, and benefit of, particular schools or designated Bureau operated education programs, including, where appropriate, the establishment and administration of trust funds. When a Bureau operated program is the beneficiary of such a gift or bequest, the Director shall make provisions for monitoring its use, and shall report to the appropriate committees of Congress the amount and terms of such gift and bequest, the use to which it is put, and any positive results achieved by such action.

"(f) For the purpose of this section the term "functions" includes powers and duties.

"SEC. 6707. ALLOTMENT FORMULA.

"(a) The Secretary shall establish, by regulation adopted in accordance with section 6719, a formula for determining the minimum annual amount of funds necessary to sustain each Bureau funded school. In establishing such formula, the Secretary shall consider—

"(1) the number of eligible Indian students served and size of the school;

"(2) special cost factors, such as—

"(A) isolation of the school;

"(B) need for special staffing, transportation, or educational programs;

"(C) food and housing costs;

"(D) maintenance and repair costs associated with the physical condition of the educational facilities;

"(E) special transportation and other costs of isolated and small schools;

"(F) the costs of boarding arrangements, where determined necessary by a tribal governing body or designated local school board;

"(G) costs associated with greater lengths of service by educational personnel; and

"(H) special programs for gifted and talented students;

"(3) the cost of providing academic services which are at least equivalent to those provided by public schools in the State in which the school is located;

"(4) such other relevant factors as the Secretary determines are appropriate.

Upon the establishment of the standards required by sections 6701 and 6702 of this Act, the Secretary shall revise the formula established under this subsection to reflect the cost and funding standards so established. Prior to January 1, 1995, the Secretary shall review the formula established under this section and shall take such steps as may be necessary to increase the availability of counseling services for students in off-reservation boarding schools and other Bureau operated residential facilities. Concurrent with such action, the Secretary shall review the standards established under section 6701 of this title to be certain that adequate provision is made for parental notification regarding, and consent for, such counseling services.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, Federal funds appropriated for the general local operation of Bureau funded schools, shall be allotted pro rata in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a).

"(c)(1) For fiscal year 1990, and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary shall adjust the formula established under subsection (a) to—

"(A) use a weighted unit of 1.2 for each eligible Indian student enrolled in the seventh and eighth grades of the school in considering the number of eligible Indian students served by the school;

"(B) consider a school with an enrollment of less than 50 eligible Indian students as having an average daily attendance of 50 eligible Indian students for purposes of implementing the adjustment factor for small schools; and

"(C) take into account the provision of residential services on a less than 9-month basis at a school when the school board and supervisor of the school determine that a less than 9-month basis will be implemented for the school year involved.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall reserve for national school board training 0.2 percent of the funds appropriated for each fiscal year for distribution under this section. Such training shall be conducted through the same organizations through which, and in the same manner in which, the training was conducted in fiscal year 1992. If the contract for such training is not awarded before May 1 of each fiscal year, the contract under which such training was provided for the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year shall be renewed by the Secretary for such fiscal year. The agenda for the training sessions shall be established by the school boards through their regional or national organizations.

"(B) For each year in which the Secretary uses a weighted unit formula established under subsection (a) to fund Bureau schools, a Bureau school which generates less than 168 weighted units shall receive an additional 2 weighted units to defray school board activities.

"(C) From the funds allotted in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a) for each Bureau school, the local school board of such school may reserve an amount which does not exceed the greater of—

"(i) $5,000, or

"(ii) the lesser of—

"(I) $15,000, or

"(II) 1 percent of such allotted funds, for school board activities for such school, including but not limited to, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, meeting expenses and the cost of membership in, and support of, organizations engaged in activities on behalf of Indian education.

"(3)(A) The Secretary shall adjust the formula established under subsection (a) to use a weighted unit of 2.0 for each eligible Indian student that—

"(i) is gifted and talented (as determined pursuant to section 6204 of the Indian Education Act of 1988), and

"(ii) is enrolled in the school on a full-time basis, in considering the number of eligible Indian students served by the school.

"(B) The adjustment required under subparagraph (A) shall be used for the later of the following fiscal years and for each fiscal year succeeding such later fiscal year:

"(i) the second fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year in which the Secretary of Education makes the report required under section 6204(c)(6)(B) of the Indian Education Act of 1988, or

"(ii) the first fiscal year for which an increase in the amount of funds appropriated for allotment under this section is designated by the law that appropriates such funds as the amount necessary to implement such adjustment without reducing allotments made under this section to any school.

"(d) The Secretary shall reserve from the funds available for distribution for each fiscal year under this section an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal 1 percent of the funds available for such purpose for that fiscal year. Such funds shall be used, at the discretion of the Director of the Office, to meet emergencies and unforeseen contingencies affecting the education programs funded under this section. Funds reserved under this subsection may only be expended for education services or programs at a schoolsite (as defined in section 5204(c)(2) of the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988). Funds reserved under this subsection shall remain available without fiscal year limitation until expended. However, the aggregate amount available from all fiscal years may not exceed 1 percent of the current year funds. Whenever the Secretary makes funds available under this subsection, the Secretary shall report such action to the appropriate committees of Congress within the annual budget submission.

"(e) Supplemental appropriations enacted to meet increased pay costs attributable to school level personnel shall be distributed under this section.

"(f) In this section 'eligible Indian student' means a student who—

"(1) is a member of or is at least a ¼ degree Indian blood descendant of a member of an Indian tribe which is eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States through the Bureau of Indian Affairs to Indians because of their status as Indians, and

"(2) resides on or near an Indian reservation or meets the criteria for attendance at a Bureau off-reservation boarding school.

"(g)(1) An eligible Indian student may not be charged tuition for attendance at a Bureau or contract school. A student attending a Bureau school under clause (2)(C) of this subsection may not be charged tuition.

"(2) The Secretary may permit the attendance at a Bureau school of a student who is not an eligible Indian student if—

"(A) the Secretary determines that the student's attendance will not adversely affect the school's program for eligible Indian students because of cost, overcrowding, or violation of standards,

"(B) the school board consents, and

"(C) the student is a dependent of a Bureau, Indian Health Service, or tribal government employee who lives on or near the school site, or

"(D) a tuition is paid for the student that is not more than that charged by the nearest public school district for out-of-district students. The tuition collected is in addition to the school's allocation under this section.

"(3) The school board of a contract school or grant school may permit students who are not eligible Indian students under this subsection to attend its contract school or grant school and any tuition collected for those students is in addition to funding under this section.

"(h)(1) The Secretary shall conduct, through contact or cooperative agreement with an entity having proven expertise in the field of school finance, and after consultation with tribes and national Indian organizations, a study to determine the feasibility and desirability of changing the method of financing for Bureau funded schools from the weighted student unit formula method in effect on the date of enactment of this Act to a school based budget system of financing. The Assistant Secretary shall take such steps as are necessary to immediately implement this provision.

"(2) For the purposes of this study, the term 'school-based budget system' means a system based upon an initial determination, at each school site, of the number of students who shall be served at the site, the needs of those students, the standards which will best meet those needs (including any standards or conditions reflecting local community input and the program developed under this part), the personnel profile necessary to establish such program and the cost (determined on an actual basis) of funding such a program. Such a system would include procedures to aggregate the determinations for each school site to determine the amount needed to fund all Bureau-funded schools, to prepare a budget submission based upon such aggregate and would provide for a mechanism for distributing such sums as may be appropriated based upon the determination at each school site.

"(3) No later than January 20, 1996, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Education and Labor and Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Indian Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate of the United States the study required under this subsection, along with any views or comments of the Secretary on such study.

"(i) Any other provision of law notwithstanding, at the election of the school board made at any time during the fiscal year, a portion equal to no more than 15 percent of the funds allocated with respect to a school under this section for any fiscal year shall remain available to the school for expenditure without fiscal year limitation. The Assistant Secretary shall take steps as may be necessary to implement this provision immediately.

"(j) Tuition for the out-of-State students boarding at the Richfield Dormitory in Richfield, Utah, who attend Sevier County high schools in Richfield, Utah, may be paid from the Indian School Equalization Program funds at a rate not to exceed the amount per Weighted Student Unit for that year for instruction. No additional administrative cost funds will be added to the grant.

"SEC. 6708. ADMINISTRATIVE COST GRANTS.

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall, subject to the availability of appropriated funds, provide grants to each tribe or tribal organization operating a contract or grant school in the amount determined under this section with respect to the tribe or tribal organization for the purpose of paying the administrative and indirect costs incurred in operating contract schools in order to—

"(A) enable tribes and tribal organizations operating such schools, without reducing direct program services to the beneficiaries of the program, to provide all related administrative overhead services and operations necessary to meet the requirements of law and prudent management practice, and

"(B) carry out other necessary support functions which would otherwise be provided by the Secretary or other Federal officers or employees, from resources other than direct program funds, in support of comparable Bureau operated programs.

"(2) Amounts appropriated to fund the grants provided under this section shall be in addition to, and shall not reduce, the amounts appropriated for the program being administered by the contract schools.

"(b)(1) The amount of the grant provided to each tribe or tribal organization under this section for each fiscal year shall be determined by applying the administrative cost percentage rate of the tribe or tribal organization to the aggregate of the Bureau elementary and secondary functions operated by the tribe or tribal organization for which funds are received from or through the Bureau. The administrative cost percentage rate determined under subsection (c) does not apply to other programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization.

"(2) The Secretary shall—

"(A) reduce the amount of the grant determined under paragraph (1) to the extent that payments for administrative costs are actually received by an Indian tribe or tribal organization under any Federal education program included in the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization, and

"(B) take such actions as may be necessary to be reimbursed by any other department or agency of the Federal Government for the portion of grants made under this section for the costs of administering any program for Indians that is funded by appropriations made to such other department or agency.

"(c) For purposes of this section, the administrative cost percentage rate for a contract or grant school for a fiscal year is equal to the percentage determined by dividing—

"(1) the sum of—

"(A) the amount equal to—

"(i) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, multiplied by

"(ii) the minimum base rate, plus

"(B) the amount equal to—

"(i) the standard direct cost base, multiplied by

"(ii) the maximum base rate, by

"(2) the sum of—

"(A) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, plus

"(B) the standard direct cost base.

The administrative cost percentage rate shall be determined to the $\frac{1}{100}$ of a decimal point.

"(d)(1)(A) Funds received by a tribe or contract or grant school as grants under this section for tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be combined by the tribe or contract school into a single administrative cost account without the necessity of maintaining separate funding source accounting.

"(B) Indirect cost funds for programs at the school which share common administrative services with tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be included in the administrative cost account described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) Funds received as grants under this section with respect to tribal elementary or secondary education programs shall remain available to the contract or grant school without fiscal year limitation and without diminishing the amount of any grants otherwise payable to the school under this section for any fiscal year beginning after the fiscal year for which the grant is provided.

"(3) Funds received as grants under this section for Bureau funded programs operated by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement shall not be taken into consideration for purposes of indirect cost underrecovery and overrecovery determinations by any Federal agency for any other funds, from whatever source derived.

"(4) In applying this section and section 106 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act with respect to an Indian tribe or tribal organization that—

"(A) receives funds under this section for administrative costs incurred in operating a contract school or a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, and

"(B) operates 1 or more other programs under a contract or grant provided under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, the Secretary shall ensure that the Indian tribe or tribal organization is provided with the full amount of the administrative costs, and of the indirect costs, that are associated with operating the contract school, a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, and all of such other programs, except that funds appropriated for implementation of this section shall be used only to supply the amount of the grant required to be provided by this section.

"(e) For purposes of this section—

"(1)(A) The term 'administrative cost' means the costs of necessary administrative functions which—

"(i) the tribe or tribal organization incurs as a result of operating a tribal elementary or secondary educational program,

"(ii) are not customarily paid by comparable Bureau operated programs out of direct program funds, and

"(iii) are either—

"(I) normally provided for comparable Bureau programs by Federal officials using resources other than Bureau direct program funds, or

"(II) are otherwise required of tribal self-determination program operators by law or prudent management practice.

"(B) The term 'administrative cost' may include, but is not necessarily limited to—

"(i) contract (or other agreement) administration;

"(ii) executive, policy, and corporate leadership and decisionmaking;

"(iii) program planning, development, and management;

"(iv) fiscal, personnel, property, and procurement management;

"(v) related office services and record keeping; and

"(vi) costs of necessary insurance, auditing, legal, safety and security services.

"(2) The term 'Bureau elementary and secondary functions' means—

"(A) all functions funded at Bureau schools by the Office of Indian Education Programs of the Bureau;

"(B) all programs—

"(i) funds for which are appropriated to other agencies of the Federal Government, and

"(ii) which are administered for the benefit of Indians through Bureau schools; and

"(C) all operation, maintenance, and repair funds for facilities and government quarters used in the operation or support of elementary and secondary education functions for the benefit of Indians, from whatever source derived.

"(3) The term 'tribal elementary or secondary educational programs' means all Bureau elementary and secondary functions, together with any other Bureau programs or portions of programs (excluding funds for social services that are appropriated to agencies other than the Bureau and are expended through the Bureau, funds for major subcontracts, construction, and other major capital expenditures, and unexpended funds carried over from prior years) which share common administrative cost functions, that are operated directly by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement with the Bureau.

"(4)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the direct cost base of a tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year is the aggregate direct cost program funding for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization during—

"(i) the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year, or

"(ii) if such programs have not been operated by the tribe or tribal organization during the 2 preceding fiscal years, the first fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) In the case of Bureau elementary or secondary education functions which have not previously been operated by a tribe or tribal organization under contract or agreement with the Bureau, the direct cost base for the initial year shall be the projected aggregate direct cost program funding for all Bureau elementary and secondary functions to be operated by the tribe or tribal organization during that fiscal year.

"(5) The term 'maximum base rate' means 50 percent.

"(6) The term 'minimum base rate' means 11 percent.

"(7) The term 'standard direct cost base' means $600,000.

"(f)(1) Upon the enactment of the Indian Education Amendments of 1988, the Secretary shall—

"(A) conduct such studies as may be needed to establish an empirical basis for determining relevant factors substantially affecting the required administrative costs of tribal elementary and secondary educational programs, using the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(B) a study to determine—

"(i) a maximum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the smallest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs,

"(ii) a minimum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the largest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs, and

"(iii) a standard direct cost base which is the aggregate direct cost funding level for which the percentage determined under subsection (c) will—

"(I) be equal to the median between the maximum base rate and the minimum base rate, and

"(II) ensure that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs closest to the size of the program.

"(2) The studies required under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) be conducted in full consultation (in accordance with section 1130) with—

"(i) the tribes and tribal organizations that are affected by the application of the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(ii) all national and regional Indian organizations of which such tribes and tribal organizations are typically members;

"(B) be conducted on-site at a representative statistical sample of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs under a contract entered into with a nationally reputable public accounting and business consulting firm;

"(C) take into account the availability of skilled labor, commodities, business and automatic data processing services, related Indian preference and Indian control of education requirements, and any other market factors found substantially to affect the administrative costs and efficiency of each such tribal elementary or secondary educational program studied in order to assure that all required administrative activities can reasonably be delivered in a cost effective manner for each such program, given an administrative cost allowance generated by the values, percentages, or other factors found in the studies to be relevant in such formula;

"(D) identify, and quantify in terms of percentages of direct program costs, any general factors arising from geographic isolation, or numbers of programs administered, independent of program size factors used to compute a base administrative cost percentage in such formula; and

"(E) identify any other incremental cost factors substantially affecting the costs of required administrative cost functions at any of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs studied and determine whether the factors are of general applicability to other such programs, and (if so) how they may effectively be incorporated into such formula.

"(3) In carrying out the studies required under this subsection, the Secretary shall obtain the input of, and afford an opportunity to participate to, the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior.

"(4) Determinations described in paragraph (2)(C) shall be based on what is pragmatically possible to do at each location studied, given prudent management practice, irrespective of whether required administrative services were actually or fully delivered at these sites, or other services were delivered instead, during the period of the study.

"(5) Upon completion of the studies conducted under paragraph (1), but in no case later than October 1, 1989, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings of the studies, together with determinations based upon such findings that would affect the definitions of terms used in the formula that is set forth in subsection (c).

"(6) The Secretary shall include in the Bureau's justification for each appropriations request for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1989, a projection of the overall costs associated with the formula set forth in subsection (c) for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs which the Secretary expects to be funded in the fiscal year for which the appropriations are sought.

"(7) For purposes of this subsection, the size of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs is determined by the aggregate direct cost program funding level for all Bureau funded programs which share common administrative cost functions.

"(g)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(2) If the total amount of funds necessary to provide grants to tribes and tribal organizations in the amounts determined under subsection (b) for a fiscal year exceeds the amount of funds appropriated to carry out this section for such fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of each grant determined under subsection (b) for such fiscal year by an amount that bears the same relationship to such excess as the amount of such grant determined under subsection (b) bears to the total of all grants determined under subsection (b) for all tribes and tribal organizations for such fiscal year.

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1989 shall—

"(A) in lieu of being determined under subsection (b), be determined for each tribal elementary or secondary educational program on the same basis that indirect costs were determined for such programs for fiscal year 1988, and

"(B) be subject to the provisions of subsection (d).

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grant provided under this section for fiscal year 1990 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1990 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1988 (or fiscal year 1989 if such program was not operated by the tribe or tribal organization during fiscal year 1988), the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) ⅓ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to ⅓ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received, over

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1991 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1991 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1990, the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) ½ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to ½ of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received over,

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(i) The provisions of this section shall also apply to those schools operating under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988.

"SEC. 6709. BUDGET PREPARATION AND SUBMISSION.

"(a) For each fiscal year beginning after October 1, 1994, and ending before October 1, 1998, the Secretary shall enter into an interagency agreement with the Secretary of Education for the purpose of carrying out this section. The Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary to transfer information requested by the Secretary of Education or the entity designated under subsection (b) of this section needed to carry out this section in a timely and accurate fashion.

"(b) The Secretary of Education, through the National Center for Education Statistics, shall prepare and submit to Congress the study set forth in subsection (c) of this section no later than January 20, 1995, and January 20 of each of the next 3 succeeding years. The Secretary of Education shall transmit the report directly and without substantive amendment to the Secretary of the Interior, the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior, and the Committees on Education and Labor and Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Indian Affairs and Appropriations of the Senate of the United States.

"(c)(1) The National Center for Educational Statistics (hereinafter referred to as the 'Center') shall prepare for each of the fiscal years covered under subsection (a) of this section a report on the amount needed to achieve academic and residential programs set forth in this part for Bureau-funded schools funded under section 6707. Such study shall be based on (A) the standards developed and implemented for Bureau-funded schools under section 6701 and 6702 of this part or such other standards as may apply to Bureau-funded contract schools or schools funded under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988, (B) the student count and characteristics of such schools, as determined pursuant to the formula developed and implemented pursuant to section 6707 of this part for the preceding academic year, adjusted for any changes in student demographics which the Center may project, (C) the employee statistics with respect to such schools for the preceding fiscal year, and (D) such other factors as the Center may set forth, including but not limited to age or physical condition of the schools and changes in isolation.

"(2) Each study shall include a total projected cost for attaining the standards set forth under paragraph (1), and shall presume compliance with those standards. Such study shall also include a projection of the cost for meeting such standards for each Bureau funded school. Such study shall also include a report on any shortfall in the amount needed to fund Bureau-funded schools, as determined by the study conducted pursuant to this section and the appropriations amount requested and enacted for the period covered by the study.

"(d)(1) Within 24 months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish within the Office of Indian Education Programs a Division of Budget Analysis (hereinafter referred to as the 'Division'). Such Division shall be under the direct supervision and control of the Director of the Office.

"(2) The Division shall have the capacity to conduct such studies, surveys, or other activities as are necessary to gather demographic information on Bureau-funded schools (current and future) and project the amount necessary to provide Indian students in such schools the educational program set forth in this part.

"(3) The Division shall prepare projections on such amounts, along with such other information as the Director of the Office shall require, for each fiscal year beginning after October 1, 1996. The Director of the Office and the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs shall use such reports when preparing their annual budget submissions.

"SEC. 6710. UNIFORM DIRECT FUNDING AND SUPPORT.

"(a)(1) Within six months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish, by regulation adopted in accordance with section 6719, a system for the direct funding and support of all Bureau-funded schools. Such system shall allot funds, in accordance with section 6707. Amounts appropriated for distribution under this section may be made available under paragraph (2) or under paragraph (3), as provided in the appropriation Act.

"(2)(A) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available pursuant to the allotments made by section 6707, amounts appropriated in an appropriation Act for any fiscal year shall become available for obligation by the affected schools on July 1 of the fiscal year in which they are appropriated without further action by the Secretary, and shall remain available for obligation through the succeeding fiscal year.

"(B) The Secretary shall, on the basis of the amount appropriated in accordance with this paragraph—

"(i) publish, on July 1 preceding the fiscal year for which the funds are appropriated, allotments to each affected school made under section 6707 of 85 percent of such appropriation; and

"(ii) publish, no later than September 30 of such preceding fiscal year, the allotments to be made under section 6707 of the remaining 15 percent of such appropriation, adjusted to reflect actual student attendance.

"(3) Notwithstanding any law or regulation, the supervisor of a Bureau school may expend an aggregate of no more than $35,000 of the amount allotted the school under section 6707 to acquire supplies and equipment for the school without competitive bidding if—

"(A) the cost for any single item purchased does not exceed $10,000;

"(B) the school board approves the procurement;

"(C) the supervisor certifies that the cost is fair and reasonable;

"(D) the documents relating to the procurement executed by the supervisor or other school staff cite this paragraph as authority for the procurement; and

"(E) the transaction is documented in a journal maintained at the school clearly identifying when the transaction occurred, what was acquired and from whom, the prices paid, the quantities acquired, and any other information the supervisor or school board considers relevant.

The Director shall be responsible for determining the application of this paragraph, including the authorization of specific individuals to carry out this authority, and shall be responsible for the provision of guidelines on the use of this authority and adequate training on such guidelines.

"(4) If a sequestration order issued under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 reduces the amount of funds available for allotment under section 6707 for any fiscal year by more than 7 percent of the amount of funds available for allotment under such section during the preceding fiscal year—

"(A) the Secretary may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, use—

"(i) funds appropriated for the operation of any Bureau school that is closed or consolidated, and

"(ii) funds appropriated for any program that has been curtailed at any Bureau school, to fund allotments made under section 6707, and

"(B) the Secretary may waive the application of the provisions of section 6701(h) with respect to the closure or consolidation of a school, or the curtailment of a program at a school, during such fiscal year if the funds described in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) with respect to such school are used to fund allotments made under section 6707 for such fiscal year.

"TITLE VII—BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 7001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Bilingual Education Act'.

"SEC. 7002. FINDINGS, POLICY, AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) language-minority Americans constitute a large and growing proportion of the Nation's population;

"(2) language-minority Americans speak virtually all world languages plus many that are indigenous to the United States;

"(3) the presence of language-minority Americans is related in part to Federal immigration policies;

"(4) many language-minority Americans are limited in their English proficiency, and many have limited education and income;

"(5) limited-English-proficient children and youth, like all other children and youth, have diverse educational needs and strengths and therefore require access to all educational programs and services;

"(6) the Federal Government has a responsibility for the education of American Indians and a special obligation to Native Alaskans, Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations to redress the effect of past Federal policies;

"(7) institutions of higher education can assist in preparing teachers, administrators and other school personnel to understand and build upon the educational strengths and needs of language-minority and culturally diverse student enrollments;

"(8) it is the purpose of this title to help ensure that limited-English-proficient students master English and develop high levels of academic attainment in content areas;

"(9) quality bilingual education programs enable children and youth to learn English and meet high academic standards including proficiency in more than one language;

"(10) as the world becomes increasingly interdependent and as international communication becomes a daily occurrence in government, business, commerce, and family life, multilingual skills constitute an important national resource which deserves protection and development;

"(11) educational technology has the potential for improving the education of language-minority and limited-English-proficient students and their families, and the Federal Government should foster this development;

"(12) research, development, implementation and dissemination of effective bilingual education methods, practices, and programs for limited-English-proficient children are essential to systemwide school reform that improves education for all children; and

"(13) a recognized means by which a child learns is through the use of the child's native language, cultural heritage, and instructional programs which use and build upon a child's non-English native language and cultural heritage to promote parent and community involvement in education, student self-esteem, proficiency in English, and subject matter achievement.

"(b) POLICY.—The Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States, in order to ensure equal educational opportunity for all children and youth and to promote educational excellence, to assist State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and community-based organizations to build their capacity to establish, implement, and sustain programs of instruction for language minority and limited-English-proficient children and youth.

"(c) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to educate language minority and limited-English-proficient children and youth to meet the same rigorous standards for academic performance expected of all children and youth, including meeting challenging State performance standards in academic areas by developing—

"(1) systemic improvement and reform of educational programs serving language-minority and limited-English-proficient students through the development and implementation of exemplary bilingual education programs and special alternative instruction programs;

"(2) data collection and dissemination, research, materials development, and technical assistance which is focused on school improvement for language-minority and limited-English-proficient students; and

"(3) programs which strengthen and improve the professional training of educational personnel who work with limited-English-proficient and language-minority students.

"SEC. 7003. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title (except part F), there are authorized to be appropriated $215,000,000 for the fiscal year 1995 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, and 1999.

"(b) DISTRIBUTION.—From the sums appropriated under subsection (a) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 25 percent for part C of this title.

"SEC. 7004. DEFINITIONS; REGULATIONS:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) The term 'native language', when used with reference to an individual, means the language normally used by such individuals, or, in the case of a child, the language normally used by the parents of the child.

"(2) The term 'language-minority' means—

"(A) individuals whose native language is other than English;

"(B) individuals who usually speak a language other than English or come from home environments where a language other than English is usually spoken; or

"(C) American Indians, Alaskan Natives, and Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations.

"(3) The term 'limited-English-proficient' means a language-minority person who has difficulty understanding, speaking, reading, or writing the English language at a level appropriate to his or her age and grade and is, thereby, academically disadvantaged in programs conducted exclusively in English.

"(4) The term 'bilingual education' refers to educational programs for limited-English-proficient students which make instructional use of both English and a student's native language. Programs of bilingual education must enable limited-English-proficient students to achieve English proficiency and academic mastery of subject matter content and higher order skills, including critical thinking, so as to meet age-appropriate grade-promotion and graduation standards in concert with national education goals. Bilingual education programs may also develop the native language skills of limited-English-proficient students, or ancestral languages of American Indians, Alaskan Natives, Native Hawaiians and native residents of the territories and freely associated nations. English proficient students may participate in bilingual education programs if the programs are designed to enable all enrolled students to become proficient in English and a second language.

"(5) The term 'special alternative instructional program' refers to educational programs for limited-English-proficient students which utilize specially designed English language curricula and services but do not use the student's native language for instructional purposes. Special alternative instructional programs must enable limited-English-proficient students to achieve English proficiency and academic mastery of subject matter content and higher order skills, including critical thinking so as to meet age-appropriate grade-promotion and graduation standards in concert with national education goals. Special alternative instructional programs are suitable for schools where the diversity of the limited-English-proficient students' native languages and the small number of students speaking each respective language makes bilingual education impractical and where there is a critical shortage of bilingual education teachers.

"(6) The term 'family education programs' refers to bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs designed to help limited-English-proficient adults and out-of-school youths achieve proficiency in the English language and to provide instruction on how parents and family members can facilitate the educational achievement of their children. When feasible, instructional programs such as the model developed under the Even Start Literacy Programs that promote adult literacy and train parents to support the educational growth of their children shall be developed. Programs shall give preference to participation by parents and immediate family members of children attending school. Family education programs may also provide instruction to facilitate higher education and employment outcomes.

"(7) The term 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

"(8) The term 'Office' means the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

"(9) The term 'community college' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 for an institution which provides not less than a 2-year program which is acceptable for full credit toward a bachelor's degree, including institutions receiving assistance under the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978.

"(10) The term 'paraprofessional' means an individual who is employed in preschool or elementary or secondary school under the supervision of a certified or licensed teacher, including individuals employed in bilingual education, special education and migrant education.

"(11) The term 'other programs for persons of limited-English-proficiency' means any programs administered by the Secretary that serve persons of limited-English-proficiency.

"(12) The term 'community-based organization' means a private nonprofit organization or Indian tribe or tribally sanctioned educational authority which is representative of a community or significant segments of a community and which provides educational or related services to individuals in the community. The term 'community-based organization' includes Native Hawaiian organizations (including Native Hawaiian education organizations) as defined in section 4009 of Public Law 100–297).

"(13) The term 'children and youth' means individuals aged 3 through 21.

"(14) The term 'immigrant children and youth' means individuals who—

"(A) are aged 3 through 21;

"(B) were not born in any State; and

"(C) have not been attending 1 or more schools in any 1 or more States for more than 2 full academic years.

"(b) REGULATION RULE.—In developing regulations under this title, the Secretary shall consult with State and local educational agencies, organizations representing limited-English-proficient individuals, and organizations representing teachers and other personnel involved in bilingual education.

"(c) PARENTAL NOTIFICATION.—Parents of children and youth participating in programs assisted under this title shall be informed of—

"(1) a student's level of English proficiency, how it was assessed, the status of a student's academic achievement and the implications of a student's educational strengths and needs for age and grade appropriate academic attainment, promotion, and graduation;

"(2) what programs are available to meet the student's educational strengths and needs and how the programs differ in content and instructional goals, and in the case of a disabled student, how the program meets the objectives of a student's individualized education program;

"(3) the instructional goals of the bilingual education or special alternative instructional program, and how the program will specifically help the limited-English-proficient student acquire English and meet age-appropriate standards for grade-promotion and graduation, including—

"(A) the benefits and nature of the bilingual educational program and of the instructional alternatives; and

"(B) the reasons for the selection of their child as being in need of bilingual education.

"(4)(A) Parents shall also be informed that they have the option of declining enrollment of their children and youth in such programs and shall be given an opportunity to do so if they so choose.

"(B) Local educational agencies are not relieved of any of their obligations under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 because parents choose not to enroll their children in bilingual education programs.

"(5) Parents must receive, in a manner and form understandable to them, including, if necessary and to the extent feasible, in their native language, the information required by this subsection. At a minimum, parents must receive—

"(A) timely information about projects funded under this part; and

"(B) if the parents of participating children so desire, notice of opportunities for regular meetings for the purpose of formulating and responding to recommendations from such parents.

"(6) no action may involve the admission or exclusion of students to or from any federally assisted education program merely on the basis of the surnames or language-minority status of such students.

Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to the State educational agency under this part, or payments by the State educational agency under this part shall be limited to local educational agencies whose actions did not cause or were not involved in the failure, as the case may be.

"SEC. 7604. STATE ALLOCATIONS.

"(b) ALLOCATIONS.—(1) Except as provided in subsections (c) and (d) of this section, of the amount appropriated for each fiscal year for this part, each State participating in this program shall receive a share equal to the proportion of its number of immigrant children and youth who are enrolled in elementary and secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of each local educational agency described in paragraph (2) within that State, and in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools within the district served by each such local educational agency, relative to the total number of immigrant children and youth so enrolled in all the States participating in this program.

"(2) The local educational agencies referred to in paragraph (1) are those local educational agencies in which the sum of the number of immigrant children and youth who are enrolled in elementary or secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of such agencies, and in elementary or secondary nonpublic schools within the districts served by such agencies, during the fiscal year for which the payments are to be made under this part, is equal to—

"(d) REALLOCATION.—Whenever the Secretary determines that any amount of a payment made to a State under this part for a fiscal year will not be used by such State for carrying out the purpose for which the payment was made, the Secretary shall make such amount available for carrying out such purpose to one or more other States to the extent the Secretary determines that such other States will be able to use such additional amount of carrying out such purpose. Any amount made available to a State from any appropriation for a fiscal year in accordance with the preceding sentence shall, for purposes of this part, be regarded as part of such State's payment (as determined under subsection (b)) for such year, but shall remain available until the end of the succeeding fiscal year.

"(3) provide assurances that such payments, with the exception of payments reserved under section 7604(e), will be distributed among local educational agencies within that State on the basis of the number of immigrant children and youth counted with respect to each such local educational agency under section 7604(b)(1);

"(4) provide assurances that the State educational agency will not finally disapprove in whole or in part any application for funds received under this part without first affording the local educational agency submitting an application for such funds reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing;

"(5) provide for making such reports as the Secretary may reasonably require to perform the functions under this part;

"(6) provide assurances—

"(A) that to the extent consistent with the number of immigrant children and youth enrolled in the elementary or secondary nonpublic schools within the district served by a local educational agency, such agency, after consultation with appropriate officials of such schools, shall provide for the benefit of these children and youth secular, neutral, and nonideological services, materials, and equipment necessary for the education of such children and youth;

"(B) that the control of funds provided under this part and title to any materials, equipment, and property repaired, remodeled, or constructed with those funds shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this part, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property; and

"(C) that the provision of services pursuant to this paragraph shall be provided by employees of a public agency or through contract by such public agency with a person, association, agency, or corporation who or which, in the provision of such services, is independent of such elementary or secondary nonpublic school and of any religious organization; and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency, and the funds provided under this paragraph shall not be commingled with State or local funds;

"(7) provide that funds reserved under subsection (e) of section 7604 be awarded on the basis of merit and need consistent with such subsection; and

"(8) provide an assurance that State and local educational agencies receiving funds under this part will comply with the requirements of section 1121(b).

"TITLE VIII—IMPACT AID

"SEC. 8001. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds that—

"(1) certain activities of the Federal Government place a financial burden on the local educational agencies serving areas where such activities are carried out; and

"(2) it is the shared responsibility of the Federal Government, the States, and local educational agencies to provide for the education of children connected to those activities.

"SEC. 8002. PURPOSE.

"In order to fulfill the Federal responsibility to assist with the provision of educational services to federally connected children, and to help them meet challenging State standards, it is the purpose of this title to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies that—

"(1) experience a substantial and continuing financial burden due to the acquisition of real property by the United States;

"(2) educate children who reside on Federal property and whose parents are employed on Federal property;

"(3) educate children of parents who are in the military services and children who live in low-rent housing;

"(4) experience sudden and substantial increases in enrollments because of military realignments; or

"(5) need special assistance with capital expenditures for construction activities because of the enrollments of substantial numbers of children who reside on Indian lands.

"SEC. 8003. PAYMENTS RELATING TO FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL PROPERTY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Where the Secretary, after consultation with any local educational agency and with the appropriate State educational agency, determines for a fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1999—

"(1) that the United States owns Federal property in the local educational agency, and that such property—

"(A) has been acquired by the United States since 1938;

"(B) was not acquired by exchange for other Federal property in the local educational agency which the United States owned before 1939; and

"(C) had an assessed value (determined as of the time or times when so acquired) aggregating 10 percent or more of the assessed value of all real property in the local educational agency (similarly determined as of the time or times when such Federal property was so acquired); and

"(2) that such agency is not being substantially compensated for the loss in revenue resulting from such ownership by increases in revenue accruing to the agency from the conduct of Federal activities with respect to such Federal property, then such agency shall be paid the amount described in subsection (b).

"(b) AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) The amount that a local educational agency shall be paid under subsection (a) for a fiscal year shall be calculated in accordance with paragraph (2), except that such amount shall be reduced by the Secretary by an amount equal to the amount of revenue, if any, that such agency received from activities conducted on such property during the previous fiscal year.

"(B) If funds appropriated under section 8014(a) are insufficient to pay the amount determined under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall ratably reduce the payment to each eligible local educational agency.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, a local educational agency may not be paid an amount under this section which exceeds the difference of—

"(i) the maximum amount that such agency is eligible to receive for such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(1)(C); and

"(ii) the amount that such agency receives in such fiscal year under section 8004(b)(2).

"(3) DETERMINATION OF AGGREGATE ASSESSED VALUE.—Such aggregate assessed value of such acquired Federal property shall be determined (on the basis of the highest and best use of property adjacent to such acquired Federal property as of the time such value is determined), and provided to the Secretary, by the local official responsible for assessing the value of real property located in the jurisdiction of such local educational agency for the purpose of levying a property tax.

"(c) APPLICABILITY TO TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT.—For the purposes of this section, any real property with respect to which payments are being made under section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 shall not be regarded as Federal property.

"(d) OWNERSHIP BY UNITED STATES.—The United States shall be deemed to own Federal property for the purposes of this Act, where—

"(1) prior to the transfer of Federal property, the United States owned Federal property meeting the requirements of subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of subsection (a)(1); and

"(2) the United States transfers a portion of the property referred to in paragraph (1) to another nontaxable entity, and the United States—

"(A) restricts some or any construction on such property;

"(B) requires that the property be used in perpetuity for the public purposes for which it was conveyed;

"(C) requires the grantee of the property to report to the Federal government (or its agent) containing information on the use of the property;

"(D) except with the approval of the Federal government (or its agent), prohibits the sale, lease, assignment, or other disposal of the property unless such sale, lease, assignment, or other disposal is to another eligible government agency; and

"(E) reserves to the Federal government a right of reversion at any time the Federal government (or its agent) deems it necessary for the national defense.

"(B) Multiply the number of children described in paragraph (1)(C) by a factor of 1.25.

"(A) the eligibility of a local educational agency for State aid for free public education; or

"(B) the amount of such aid; or

"(2) make such aid available to local educational agencies in a manner that results in less State aid to any local educational agency that is eligible for such payment than it would receive if it were not so eligible.

"(b) STATE EQUALIZATION PLANS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A State may reduce State aid to a local educational agency that receives a payment under sections 8003 and 8004(a) (except the amount calculated in excess of 1.0 under subparagraph (B) of subsection (a)(2)) or under the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) as such Act existed prior to the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act of 1994 (other than an increase in payments described in paragraphs (2)(B), (2)(C), (2)(D), or (3)(B)(ii) of section 3(d) of such Act of September 30, 1950) for any fiscal year if the Secretary determines, and certifies under subsection (c)(3)(A), that such State has in effect a program of State aid that equalizes expenditures for free public education among local educational agencies in such State.

"(2) COMPUTATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a program of State aid equalizes expenditures among local educational agencies if, in the second preceding fiscal year, the amount of per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the highest such per-pupil expenditures or revenues did not exceed the amount of such per-pupil expenditures made by, or per-pupil revenues available to, the local educational agency in the State with the lowest such expenditures or revenues by more than 10 percent.

"(B) OTHER FACTORS.—In making a determination under this subsection, the Secretary shall—

"(i) disregard local educational agencies with per-pupil expenditures or revenues above the 95th percentile or below the 5th percentile of such expenditures or revenues in the State; and

"(ii) take into account the extent to which a program of State aid reflects the additional cost of providing free public education in particular types of local educational agencies, such as those that are geographically isolated, or to particular types of students, such as children with disabilities.

"(3) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding paragraph (2), if the Secretary determines that the State has substantially revised its program of State aid, the Secretary may certify such program for any fiscal year only if—

"(A) the Secretary determines, on the basis of projected data, that the State's program will meet the 10 percent disparity standard described in paragraph (2) in that fiscal year; and

"(B) the State provides an assurance to the Secretary that, if final data do not demonstrate that the State's program met such standard for that year (or that it met such standard with a greater percentage of disparity than anticipated), the State will pay to each affected local educational agency the amount by which it reduced State aid to the local educational agency on the basis of such certification, or a proportionate share thereof, as the case may be.

"(c) PROCEDURES FOR REVIEW OF STATE EQUALIZATION PLANS.—

"(1) WRITTEN NOTICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any State that wishes to consider payments described in subsection (b)(1) in providing State aid to local educational agencies shall submit to the Secretary, not later than 120 days before the beginning of the State's fiscal year, a written notice of its intention to do so.

"(B) CONTENTS.—Such notice shall be in the form and contain the information the Secretary requires, including evidence that the State has notified each local educational agency in the State of its intention to consider such payments in providing State aid.

"(2) OPPORTUNITY TO PRESENT VIEWS.—Before making a determination under subsection (b), the Secretary shall afford the State, and local educational agencies in the State, an opportunity to present their views.

"(3) QUALIFICATION PROCEDURES.—If the Secretary determines that a program of State aid qualifies under subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

"(A) certify the program and so notify the State; and

"(B) afford an opportunity for a hearing, in accordance with section 8012(a), to any local educational agency adversely affected by such certification.

"(4) NON-QUALIFICATION PROCEDURES.—If the Secretary determines that a program of State aid does not qualify under subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

"(A) so notify the State; and

"(B) afford an opportunity for a hearing, in accordance with section 8012(a), to the State, and to any local educational agency adversely affected by such determination.

"(d) REDUCTIONS OF STATE AID.—

"(e) REMEDIES FOR STATE VIOLATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary or any aggrieved local educational agency may, without exhausting administrative remedies, bring an action in a United States district court against any State that violates subsection (a) or subsection (d)(2) or fails to carry out an assurance provided under subsection (b)(3)(B).

"(2) IMMUNITY.—A State shall not be immune under the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States from an action described in paragraph (1).

The clerk of the court shall promptly transmit a copy of the petition to the Secretary. The Secretary shall then file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary's action was based, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(2) FINDINGS OF FACT.—The findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence. The Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the Secretary's previous action, and shall file in the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(3) REVIEW.—The court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. ### "SEC. 10001. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

"(1) Growing numbers of children are negatively affected by influences outside of the classroom which increase their risk of academic failure.

"(2) Factors such as poor nutrition, unsafe living conditions, physical and sexual abuse, family and gang violence, inadequate health care, unemployment, lack of child care and substance abuse adversely affect family relationships and the ability of a child to learn.

"(3) Parents and other caregivers in today's high pressure society often face demands which place restraints on their time and affect their ability to adequately provide for the needs of their families.

"(4) Access to health and social service programs can address the basic physical and emotional needs of children so that they can fully participate in the learning experiences offered them in school.

"(5) Services for at-risk students need to be more convenient, less fragmented, regulated and duplicative in order to meet the needs of children and their families.

"(6) School personnel, parents, and support service providers often lack knowledge of, and access to, available services for at-risk students and their families in the community, and have few resources to coordinate services and make them accessible.

"(7) Service providers, such as teachers, social workers, health care and child care providers, juvenile justice workers and others, are often trained in separate disciplines that provide little support for the coordination of services.

"(8) Coordination of services is more cost effective because it substitutes prevention for expensive crisis intervention.

"(9) Coordinating health and social services with education can help the Nation meet the National Education Goals by ensuring better outcomes for children.

"(b) PURPOSE OF COORDINATING SERVICES.—The purpose of this section is to provide elementary and secondary school students and their families better access to the social, health and education services necessary for students to succeed in school and for their families to take an active role in ensuring that children receive the best possible education.

"SEC. 10002. DEFINITIONS.

"(b) An 'eligible entity' is a local educational agency, individual school, or consortium of schools.

"(2) identify the measures that will be taken to establish a communitywide partnership that links public and private agencies providing services to children and families; and

"(3) identify any other measures that will be taken to develop a comprehensive plan for the implementation of a coordinated services project or projects.

"(c) PROJECT IMPLEMENTATION.—Eligible entities shall submit to the Secretary a plan for the implementation or expansion of a coordinated services project. Such plan shall include—

"(1) the results of a children and families needs assessment, which will include an assessment of the needs of foster children;

"(2) the membership of the coordinated services project partnership;

"(3) a description of the proposed coordinated services project, its objectives, where it will be located, and the staff that will be used to carry out the purposes of the project;

"(4) a description of how the success of the coordinated services project will be evaluated;

"(5) a description of the training to be provided to teachers and appropriate personnel; and

"(6) information regarding whether or not a sliding scale fee for services will be employed, and if not, an explanation of why such scale is not feasible.

"SEC. 10004. USES OF FUNDS.

"(a) AGENCY COORDINATION.—The Secretaries of Education, Health and Human Services, Labor, Housing and Urban Development, Treasury, and Agriculture, and the Attorney General shall review the programs administered by their agencies to identify barriers to service coordination.

"(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Such Secretaries and the Attorney General shall submit jointly a report to the Congress not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of the Improving America's Schools Act, based on the review required under paragraph (a) recommending legislative and regulatory action to address such barriers, and during this time, shall use waiver authorities authorized under this and other Acts.

"SEC. 10007. LIMITATION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR COORDINATION OF SERVICES.

PART C—IMPACT AID STATUTES

SEC. 331. AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC LAW 815.

(a) SECTION 2.—Section 2 of the Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, 81st Congress; 20 U.S.C. 632) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. PORTION OF APPROPRIATIONS AVAILABLE FOR PAYMENTS.

"For each fiscal year the Secretary shall distribute the funds appropriated in accordance with section 1 which shall be available for carrying out the provisions of sections 5, 9, 10, and 14. The funds provided under section 1 for the schools serving military dependents and Indian lands shall be divided equally between section 5 and section 14 of this Act. Funds provided under section 5 of this Act shall be divided equally between the priority categories of section 1(a)(1) and 1(a)(2) of this Act.".

(b) SECTION 3.—Section 3 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 633) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF PRIORITIES.

"Applications for construction or modification projects provided for under this Act must be filed by June 30 of the fiscal year prior to the year in which funds are first requested. The Secretary shall use the following order of priority in approving applications under section 5 and funded in accordance with section 1(a)(1) and section 1(a)(2) of this Act. The priority of payment of application under section 1(a)(1) shall be based on the highest percentage of number of children in need of minimum school facilities. The priority of payment of applications under section 1(a)(2) shall be based on the highest percentage of federally connected students eligible for payment. The Secretary shall use the priorities stated in this section in approving applications in the event the funds appropriated under section 1 of this title and remaining available on any such date for payment to local educational agencies are less than the Federal share of the cost of the projects with respect to which applications have been filed prior to such date (and for which funds under section 1 have not already been obligated). Only applications meeting the conditions for approval under this Act (other than section 6(b)(2)(C)) shall be considered applications for purposes of the preceding sentence. Such order of priority shall provide that applications payments based upon increases in the number of children residing on, or residing with a parent employed on property which is party of a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall not be approved for any fiscal year until all other applications under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 5 have been approved for the fiscal year.".

(c) SECTION 5.—Section 5 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 635) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. LIMITATION ON TOTAL PAYMENTS TO ANY LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.

"(a) Subject to the limitations in subsection (c) the total of the payments to a local educational agency under this Act may not exceed the sum of—

"(1) the estimated increase, since the base year, in the number of children determined with respect to such agency who live on Federal property and have a parent who works on Federal property multiplied by 100 percent of the average per pupil cost of constructing minimum school facilities in the State in which the school district of such agency is situated;

"(2) the estimated increase, since the base year, in the number of children determined with respect to such agency who have a parent who lives on or works on Federal property multiplied by 50 percent of such cost;

"(3) In computing for any local educational agency the number of children in an increase under paragraph (1) or (2), the estimated number of children described in such paragraph who will be in the membership of the schools of such agency at the close of the increase period shall be compared with the estimated number of such children in average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year. However, the base year average daily membership shall be adjusted to exclude the number of children that formed the basis for previous payments on applications approved 30 or more years prior to the close of the increased period for the current application.

"(b) If two of the paragraphs of subsection (a) apply to a child, the local educational agency shall elect which of such paragraphs shall apply to such child, except that, notwithstanding the election of a local educational agency to have paragraph (2) apply to a child instead of paragraph (1), the determination of the maximum amount for such agency under subsection (a) shall be made without regard to such election.

"(c) A local educational agency shall not be eligible to have any amount included in its maximum by reason of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) unless the increase in children referred to in such paragraph is at least 20, and in the case of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a), is—

"(1) equal to at least 6 percent of the number of federally connected children who were in the average daily membership of the schools of such agency during the base year, or

"(2) at least 750,

whichever is the lesser.

"(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, whenever and to the extent that, in his judgment, exceptional circumstances exist which make such action necessary to avoid inequity and avoid defeating the purposes of the Act, the Secretary may waive or reduce the minimum number requirement or any percentage requirement or requirements in subsection (c).

"(e) In determining under this section the total of the payments which may be made to a local educational agency on the basis of any application, the total number of children counted for purposes of paragraph (1) or (2), as the case may be, of subsection (a) may not exceed—

"(1) the number of children whose membership at the close of the increase period for the application is compared with average daily membership in the base period for purposes of that paragraph, provided that the base year average daily membership does not include any children which formed the basis of payment in the applications approved 30 or more years ago, minus

"(2) the number of such children whose membership at the close of the increase period was compared with membership in the base year for purposes of such paragraph under the last previous application, provided the application was funded within the last 4 years, if any, of the agency on the basis of which any payments have been or may be made to that agency.".

(d) SECTION 6.—Section 6 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 636) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) If the application has not been funded within the 3-year period, the local educational agency must recertify their need to have the application remain active.".

Mr. MICHEL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the prior agreement, the time for this amendment will be 1 hour, to be equally divided between the proponent and an opponent.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

□ 1930

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, recently I had the chance to be with a group of young Americans, winners of the VFW Voice of Democracy contest, and it occurred to me that these fine young Americans, as well as many others, could well be impacted by what we do in this bill.

Yes, 94 percent of education spending in our country comes from sources other than the Federal Government, but what we say and do here has a profound effect on the shape and scope and substance of American education. That is why I am offering a substitute amendment to H.R. 6.

This substitute amendment reflects how we, as Republicans, would reauthorize the elementary and secondary education programs. At the heart of this amendment are five basic principles of sound education: local control, maximum flexibility, streamlining Federal paperwork, high standards and expectations, and parental rights.

Let me briefly outline what this amendment seeks to do. First, it eliminates the $1.15 billion from the bill by terminating programs President Clinton proposed to terminate in his fiscal 1995 budget. It also eliminates all the new programs added in the Education and Labor Committee markup.

The amendment then eliminates numerous reporting requirements layered on States and localities including the onerous opportunity-to-learn standards.

Flexibility is increased by streamlining waiver provisions in H.R. 6, makes it easier for the State and local educators to secure waivers of Federal regulations, and the substitute allows greater use of schoolwide strategies which allow schools to combine funds from a number of Elementary and Secondary Education Act programs into a single effort to benefit the whole school.

Our amendment protects parental rights by including provisions allowing local school districts to develop public school choice programs for chapter 1 students. A choice must be provided to parents, particularly with low and middle incomes whose children attend schools that have failed to improve after 3 years of corrective action.

The concept of choice offered in our amendment is neither a panacea for all educational ills nor a radical innovation. It is, rather, a prudent limited application of the concept of parental freedom and responsibility to the field of education.

And I may remind my colleagues that the House has already favorably acted on this issue when the Boehner amendment was adopted on March 3.

Finally, this amendment retains compromise language for the development of standards and assessments agreed to by the Nation's Governors in 1989, continuing the process of setting high standards in key academic subjects.

The amendment also prohibits the use of funds for family planning and reproductive health services and restores the Governors' funds for drug-free schools and communities.

Mr. Chairman, over the years, we have learned the hard way that we cannot dictate educational excellence from Washington. We can only hope to have the wisdom to pass sound, if limited, legislation, the courage to admit we cannot do everything, and the desire to help parents better exercise their basic right to educate their children as they see fit.

That is why I ask my colleagues to join me in making H.R. 6 a better bill by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of my time be allocated to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOEHNER], and that he in turn, be permitted to yield time as he so sees fit on our side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have one-half hour, and hopefully we will not consume either one-half of the hour.

While I hold the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] in utmost respect, as I know all Members of this body do, rise in opposition to the Michel substitute.

H.R. 6 represents a very carefully crafted compromise designed to reflect the concerns of Democrats and Republicans alike. We have worked very closely to go over a yearlong process of crafting this bill. We had 39 meetings of the members. We have had 36 bipartisan subgroups meeting on various areas of this bill, and I think it does represent the best.

I have always said that the education bill is best when it is drafted in a bipartisan manner. But the Michel substitute would eliminate several key provisions of H.R. 6. which we have labored so hard to put together.

Let me just mention a few of those. It eliminates the library media assistance provisions. I suggest that we look at the libraries in this country. We know the average copyright date of a library book in our schools is 1965. That is before men went to the Moon. We certainly must help our libraries.

We have met with our librarians back home. Most of us have spoken to them that we will support their libraries and reflect our Federal concern for the fact those books are 1965 average copyright.

We also close out in the Michel substitute the Federal support, a minor Federal support, minimal Federal support, for those who come in the Close Up Program, those who need it the most.

I would again suggest that after we have labored so hard in a bipartisan manner that we should not destroy that bipartisan work that we have produced.

I, therefore, would oppose the Michel amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON], a member of the committee.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, It is difficult to follow those bipartisan comments of our subcommittee chairman, and I do agree with him. But I think I can follow our leader and say that he is right, this is what the Republicans would have tried to do if we had been in charge, per se.

What is different? I want you to understand that the substitute that is being offered is different in a couple of, I think, important ways.

First and foremost, we realize fiscal reality, and so we do not authorize funding levels that we know we are never going to appropriate, by sending false hopes back home. That is why you will see that in most areas we literally, honestly, do such sums, but in recognizing those fiscal realities, we say perhaps it is important to make sure that more of that money goes back home to those schools and is used for the actual delivery of educational services rather than Federal or State bureaucracies, rather than rules, regulations, and reporting requirements.

I think one of the things that you have heard discussed throughout this process is this whole concern about how many new reporting requirements and plans will be there as a condition of receiving particular Federal funds. In that regard, I have to tell you, and I suppose this means we lose some votes on the Democratic side, but one of the things the substitute does is it strikes all references to opportunity-to-learn standards, because there is at least a misunderstanding, if not an outright opposition, to that concept, I think, by many, many Members here on both sides.

Second, what we try to do is understand that in chapter 1 we need to be more flexible. We need to make it easier for schools to go to schoolwide programs, and so we lower the percentages in that particular area.

Likewise, we eliminate the 1-percent parental reporting requirement that is in the bill that we have discussed in the past.

Similarly, when you move to chapter 2, you find the same kind of thing. We remove the 13-percent set-aside for competitive grants for higher education and return control of those funds to the LEA's where we think they can be used most effectively.

Likewise, as you move into the other areas, we try to maintain many of the ideas that we have put together, frankly, on a bipartisan basis for innovative education programs, and we create a new fund literally for improvement of education and add such things as charter schools and flexibility in that particular area.

So I would call to my colleagues' attention that this is a very different kind of substitute. It is a substitute with the same commitment, the same basic education outline, but it says let us have faith in local government, let us believe that they have the best interests of our children at heart, and let us not overwhelm them as we have done providers of health care with rules, regulations, and reporting requirements.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

As the chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] pointed out, this has been a carefully crafted piece of legislation stretching over many months of subcommittee hearings, full committee hearings, and markups. It has been extensively debated on the floor of this House; indeed, at this juncture, one might say exhaustively debated. Most of the issues that have been mentioned by the preceding speakers contained in this proposal have been presented and have been, in most part, rejected.

This legislation could be improved. We could do better, I think, in targeting chapter 1 funds, but by and large this legislation deserves to be passed, and the substitute deserves to be rejected.

There are new programs in this legislation. Those new programs respond to real needs, as the chairman of the subcommittee pointed out, particularly in the area of libraries where we have books that are years and years out of date, and we propose to help school systems correct that great disparity.

□ 1940

In sum, this legislation will fortify public education in conjunction with Goals 2000, which is an attempt to help stimulate reform at the local level. These are two solid legislative proposals which will improve public education and indeed make us competitive in the world, make our children the best educated in the world, and that is an obligation we owe to them and we will discharge by rejecting this amendment and supporting the underlying legislation proposed by the committee.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MILLER] a valued member of our committee.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Michel substitute. It is a streamlined and fiscally responsible way to address the education needs from the Federal Government level.

Mr. BOEHNER and I have offered 8 amendments so far to add some fiscal sanity to this bill, and all 8 were defeated. It is hard to get fiscal responsibility in education because it sounds like you are arguing against motherhood and apple pie.

The root cause of so many problems in our country is education, whether it is the teen pregnancy problem or the crime problem or the welfare problem; education is the root cause of the problem. But elementary and secondary education is the primary responsibility of the family, of the local and of the State governments. The Federal Government only gets 5 percent of the money. My problem with the bill that has been introduced, H.R. 6, is twofold: One is the mandate issue and requirements forced on the schools; but more important is the fiscal sanity and additional spending. As I said before, it started out as $10.5 billion and ended up at $12.4 billion. Where does the money come from? We just do not have the money. If we increase the spending here, we have to cut it somewhere else. Are we going to cut title I, are we going to cut chapter 2, and we will go through the same problem when we get to the crime bill and the health bill? These are all things we need to address.

It is unfortunate that the 8 amendments that Mr. BOEHNER and I offered were all defeated, because we talk about fiscal responsibility and a balanced budget amendment, and then we end up voting to increase spending. It just does not make sense.

I want to close with two comments from my meeting with my school superintendents in my district. My school superintendent, Dr. Fowler, in Sarasota told me, "Remember, Dan, Washington cannot be the local school board. The local school board is the one that has got to make decisions on how to run the schools." And as Mr. Witt, the superintendent from Manatee County, told me, "Keep your fingers out of our day-to-day business in Manatee County." That is what this bill is doing wrong. It is not fiscally responsible, and it has too much influence and control of the local schools.

I hope everybody will support the Michel substitute.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, we are about to complete what has been a truly historical legislative experience. This is the 9th time the Congress has written and rewritten this Elementary and Secondary Education Act. We have spent more time on this bill than we did during any of the previous 8 times we have authorized the act.

During the early 1960's, when the first ESEA bill came to the 89th Congress, that landmark bill providing the first major, comprehensive Federal effort to assist our Nation's elementary and secondary public schools—a bill that involved very serious church/state issues and the difficult fundamental question of whether the Federal Government should be involved at all in supporting local schools—we had 3 days of House floor consideration. Thirteen amendments were considered. Only two were adopted.

In the 90th Congress, we reauthorized ESEA, and it took us again 3 days on the House floor. Fourteen amendments were offered. We accepted seven.

In the 93d Congress, during some very troubling times when segregated schools, desegregation, efforts, and school busing dominated our debates, the Congress spent 3 days on the House floor reauthorizing ESEA. Thirty amendments were offered, and 11 were accepted.

Mr. Chairman, we have reauthorized this act eight times. In each of the previous seven times we reauthorized this act we spent and average of 2½ days on the House floor. We considered on the average 18 amendments. We accepted on average nine amendments, or half of those offered.

However, this time we have set a new record.

This is the seventh day of our consideration. Thirty-nine amendments have been offered. Eighteen have been accepted, seven by recorded vote. Four have been withdrawn. Seventeen amendments have been rejected, nine by recorded vote. On average, only about one-fourth of the members have voted for the failed amendments. Yet we have debated them for hours on end, often with the knowledge that the sponsor of these amendments had no intention of supporting the bill, even if his or her amendment was adopted. I would even go so far as to say that some members who have had their amendments adopted still won't support this bill.

Let me give you a few examples of what I mean. We spent almost 3 hours debating one issue—on and on we went. Political posturing was the hallmark. The amendment was not even controversial, as evidenced by the 424–1 vote by which it passed.

We spent nearly 3 hours debating whether we would, in effect, turn school officials into Immigration and Naturalization Service agents. That amendment received only 78 votes.

We spent nearly 3 hours debating whether we should help our schools teach children whose primary language is not English, or whether we should leave those schools on their own to address this growing national problem with their own, very limited funds. The amendment to terminate Federal aid to these schools received only 58 votes.

We spent nearly 2 hours on school prayer, and over an hour on whether we were going to dictate, at the Federal level, how schools were going to teach sex education classes. Today we've spent another 2 hours debating whether once again the Federal Government should dictate how schools should teach and what they should teach. And today's debate took a very unfortunate nasty, rude turn.

If my calculations are correct, we have spent 18 hours on issues that will not help our schools one bit. H.R. 6 is an education bill, a bill that helps our schools and our school teachers do the important job of educating our children more effectively. And if we had spent 2 working days debating issues that would help our schools, I'd have no complaint. But in my opinion the examples I've given above had nothing to do with helping our schools. Just the opposite. Many of them would harm our schools, interfere with local control of schools, and turn schools into institutions the American people never asked them, or wanted them, to be. I don't believe these amendments were helpful to either the legislative process or the education process. In fact, I believe they abused both processes.

I point all of this out simply to sound an alarm to my colleagues. The people's business, which we are about, is serious business indeed. And in doing that business, we want all issues to be fully debated. Open rules permit that. But as this bill proves, open rules can indeed be used not to further meaningful debate, but to tie this body up with issues that most Members of this body never have any intention of supporting. I think the lesson that H.R. 6 teaches us is this—open rules can sometimes be good, but it is equally as important to let the legislative process move forward in a way that does not tie this body up in frivolous issues that have little or no bearing on the substantive matter before us. I think it is absolutely essential that there be trust and faith in the legislative process. That requires rules and discipline, and an allegiance to those on all our parts.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume in order to respond to the gentleman from Montana.

You know, democracy is a messy business. It takes time. Everything that is said on this floor is not what we would all want to have said each and every day. All the amendments that come to this floor are not the amendments that we would want to have. But I would suggest to the gentleman from Montana and others who are concerned about the length of the time this debate has taken, that this is in fact that democracy means, that we bring this debate to the floor, that we have a discussion, that we actually vote the will of the people and not do like we usually do, have presented to us 1 of 100 options predisposed as to what it is going to be and we get one chance to vote up or down and that is the end of it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. BALLENGER.]

Mr. BALLENGER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Michael substitute for H.R. 6. As a member of the committee, I would like to say that I had many amendments, and none of them was accepted. As it is, H.R. 6 is a disappointing bill that will do little to improve America's schools. Instead it relies on opportunity to learn standards and unfunded Federal mandates. True education reform must be driven locally, by parents, teachers, local administrators, and the community as a whole—not the Federal Government. H.R. 6 relies far too heavily on Federal control. It will stifle locally driven reform.

Under current law, ESEA covers 61 programs. President Clinton's proposal to reauthorize ESEA contained only 26 programs. Unfortunately, many programs were added back by the majority during the committee markup. As it stands, the number of programs in H.R. 6 is back up to a grand total of 48. The problem with so many programs is a lack of focus and priorities. When the Appropriations Committee designates funding, it will try to fund as many programs as possible, thereby diluting funds to the larger and broader programs like chapter 1 and chapter 2. The Michel substitute eliminates the programs that were added back to the original bill sent to us by the President.

The Michel substitute gives schools the tools to improve, and eliminates the cumbersome opportunity to learn standards. I urge my colleagues to vote yes for this substitute and say "yes" to the flexibility necessary to adapt Federal programs to the unique needs of schools all over this country. I urge my colleagues to say "yes" to streamlined access to Federal funds, and high standards, and expectations for all children, and "yes" to paperwork reduction and parental involvement.

Mr. Chairman, the vote on the Michel substitute is the only vote we will have to truly improve America's schools. I urge my colleagues to join with me in voting "yes" on the Michel substitute.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GENE GREEN].

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], the chairman of our subcommittee, for not only allowing me 3 minutes to speak, but also for his hard work on this particular bill. As the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS] said, we spent more time on this bill than we have on many other bills this session.

I am a proud member of the Committee on Education and Labor and the subcommittee that this bill came out of, and I rise today in opposition to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I oppose this substitute because it would undermine the result of 13 months of negotiations between members from both sides of the aisle and would undo a number of carefully crafted compromises designed to bring this House in consensus on this bill. The fact that this substitute is being offered is particularly frustrating since I believe we have come a long way in addressing the concerns of the minority members on a number of issues.

During the entire committee process, members from both sides of the aisle had ample opportunity to raise objections to parts of the bill and each of those objections had a full and open discussion. The compromise reached on the "opportunity-to-learn" standards represents one of the best efforts I have seen in both sides of our committee working together to reach an agreement. Reaching these agreements was not easy and often resulted in heated debate and now that these commitments have been made, some in the minority feel compelled to undermine these agreements by offering a substitute that deletes the opportunity-to-learn agreement.

The Michel substitute also deletes a number of important programs such as the school library component of title II and does not ensure that services are provided to limited-English proficient students under the technical assistance center.

The Michel substitute also does not contain the set aside for the Drug Abuse Resistance Education [DARE] program. This program is supported by the education professionals and law enforcement agencies across the country and deserves to be included in this reauthorization.

Members, the Michel substitute has a number of shortcomings which I have described but the largest shortcoming in this plan is that it attempts to bypass the committee process in which we worked hard to create a bill that could be supported by both Republicans and Democrats. Education is not a partisan issue and I appeal to my colleagues to support the only version of this bill that was drafted in a bipartisan manner. Please oppose the Michel substitute and support the committee version of this bill that is the result of countless hours of hearings, negotiations, and compromise.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Michel substitute to H.R. 6. In doing so, Mr. Chairman, I rise to support local control of education. I am impressed that there is a basic philosophical issue here.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GENE GREEN] just talked about all the details and all the things we might do. There is a basic philosophical question as to what the role of the Federal Government is in education.

I rise in support of more flexibility for local schools. Local schools are quite different; they are quite different in Basin, WY, than they are in Baltimore, MD, and I think we have to have that kind of flexibility.

I rise in support of more concentrated, block-grant approaches to Federal funding of education where local people can make the decisions.

And, Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the core Federal programs, chapter 1 and chapter 2.

I have been very involved in education. I have been on a school board. My wife is a teacher; my family has teachers. I am interested in that.

I am chairman of the Disabilities Council in our State, and I know we need these programs, but I am amazed at the things that come up to sort of clutter the area of helping in this area. My problem with H.R. 6 is not with the motivation behind the legislation, but behind the implementation.

H.R. 6 contains many new reporting requirements, focuses on inputs instead of results, funds several narrowly defined categorical programs and generally expands the role of the Federal Government in education in conflict with the philosophy I have.

The Michel substitute recognizes the legitimate role the Federal Government has in education.

While maintaining the important core programs in H.R. 6, and the funding that goes with it, the Michel substitute eliminates the Federal micromanagement found throughout H.R. 6.

The Michel substitute promotes flexibility from excessive Federal regulations and allows local schools the freedom to innovate.

It seems to me that is a more appropriate role for the Federal Government, and I encourage my colleagues to vote for the Michel substitute and against H.R. 6.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, nor do I invite any, but I do reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE].

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Michel substitute to H.R. 6.

H.R. 6 has taken a long time to come to the floor. Subcommittee hearings began in February 1993. This past February, it was marked out of subcommittee. And since February 23, we have been debating it on the floor.

Four hundred and twelve days of consideration is exhaustive; but it is necessary, as this is an important bill. Quite simply what we have been debating is how to define the Federal role in education.

As Governor of Delaware, I had the opportunity to visit each and every public school in my State at least once. Through these visits, I saw different schools make different decisions and different ways of carrying out their reforms—thereby charting out a course of high standards, leading to effective learning and achievement.

One of the great strengths in our current system is that from the beginning, education has been locally based and funded. The Federal Government has—and continues to have—a valuable purpose in assisting with the education of our disadvantaged students.

This precisely is the heart of H.R. 6. If you have been listening to most of the recent debate on this bill, you may have heard other extraneous messages.

Circumstances differ from State to State, and school district to school district. It is inappropriate for the Federal Government—namely, Congress—to create Federal rules and regulations that will tie the hands of those who best know how to educate his or her students: local educators.

I will support final passage of committee-reported H.R. 6. It is a good bill. Most of its consideration focused on bipartisan negotiations. Nonetheless, the Federal role in education as defined by the committee bill is still more stringent.

In contrast, the Republican substitute retains many of the committee-bill's components—it contains a valid funding formula, returns flexibility to the Chapter 2 Program, and eliminates costly additional programs—such as library media and technology assistance—that are already funded in the bill.

The original bill begins to encroach on our schools. This substitute ensures that the Federal Government's role is to set high curricula and performance standards for schools to meet and access progress toward meeting these standards.

Control over subject areas, curriculum, classroom activities, and teaching methods should stay with States and schools.

This substitute correctly defines the Federal role in education and ensures that we keep every aspect of education local. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the ranking Republican, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, as I said when we began this discussion way back in the Dark Ages, the staffs in a bipartisan way did an outstanding job in bringing to the committee an outstanding piece of legislation. I truly believe that we messed it up somewhat after the subcommittee and the full committee began to work with it. The Michel substitute would be the ideal piece of legislation to take into conference with the Senate, and then we would not encourage the Senate to add 18, or 20, or 30 more programs.

So again, like the Governor, I plan to support the legislation that the committee has developed, with the hope that by the time it gets to the President's desk, we will have corrected many things that, as I said, we messed up in committee.

In the meantime, however, it seems to me that the Michel substitute is the ideal place to start with when we are going to negotiate with the Senate.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. McKEON] a member of the committee.

Mr. McKEON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Before I came to this body I had the opportunity to serve on a local school board for several years. I served with four concerned members of the community and together we spent countless hours trying to meet the needs of the young people for whom we were responsible. A friend of mine once told me that people who serve on school boards are going to have a special place in heaven.

When I was first elected to the board, our budget was approximately $16 million dollars. At the end of my 9 years, that budget was up to $40 million. Over 85 percent of this money came from the State and Federal Governments. That's a lot of money and I think we could have done an excellent job of educating our young people. The problem was that even though we were elected as local, on-the-spot officials, we had very little say in what went on in our schools. While the Federal and State Governments sent us most of the money, they sent even more mandates. We were constantly trying to do all the things they asked us to do rather than do what was really best for the children.

I'm a strong advocate for local control of the educational process and for minimizing Federal and State mandates. I assure you those I know who serve on local school boards would give up that special place in heaven to have more say in the educational process.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Michel substitute.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOEKSTRA] a member of the committee.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I rise tonight in support of the Michel substitute to H.R. 6, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. I appreciate the opportunity we have had to openly and fully debate this issue. We have made a number of improvements over the last couple of weeks.

Having said that, I still have to come to the conclusion that this legislation still goes too far. I have received a tremendous number of calls and letters against H.R. 6, and people know that we face a dramatic change in educational policy. What we face with H.R.

6 is a dramatic move toward greater Federal control and mandates if H.R. 6 is passed as is.

I support flexibility in Federal policy. For those who agree with me that states and localities should make the decisions which affect their own children in the schools in their communities, vote for the Michel substitute. For those who agree with me that opportunity to learn standards are the camel's nose under the tent, vote for this substitute. For those who agree with me that Federal guidelines should be minimized and limited resources should be focused on programs which do the most good, not what we in Washington think work, vote for the Michel substitute.

A good example of what the Michel substitute would allow school districts to do is allow them a great deal of flexibility. It would allow for schoolwide strategies, schoolwide projects, that would let the schools take a look at the Federal dollars they are receiving, and rather than trying to meet a formula or specific project criteria, take these funds and allocate them to the specific needs of that school district, of the children in that school.

We do not tell them where to use the money, but we trust local school districts, local teachers, local parents, and local school boards, to trust their judgment to spend it the best way that they feel is necessary.

A vote for this substitute is a vote in support of your local school districts and students everywhere.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Michel substitute. Often in this Chamber the minority Members are accused of not having a real alternative, of not proposing and taking a stand on what we believe in.

I want to say that the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MICHEL, the minority leader of our Members in this Chamber, has proposed a bill that is a bill that we as Republicans would support if in fact we were in charge of this institution.

Why? I think it is pretty simple. Throughout this entire debate over these last few weeks, we have tried to point out that this bill before us, the committee bill, has some 46 different programs. The entire focus of the bill goes from here to here to here. It is all over the lot.

What we believe is that we ought to get this money to students and schools who need it in America in the most efficient way, with the least red tape and bureaucracy attached to it. And that is what we do in our proposal.

We also eliminate many of the programs that the President tried to eliminate when he sent his reauthorization bill here. We have not added all of these programs back in as the committee members did during the markup several weeks ago.

So this bill, in my opinion, is an effort on the part of the Republicans to leave control where it belongs, to the States and local communities, to empower parents and teachers and principals to make decisions about education, not Members of Congress or bureaucrats here in Washington, DC.

This is a very good effort on the part of minority Members. It deserves the consideration of all Members, and I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MICHEL.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 173, noes 245, not voting 20, as follows:

Messrs. STUDDS, HORN, and GILMAN changed their vote from "aye" to "no".

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DOOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to thank Chairman FORD and ranking member GOODLING for including my amendments in the en bloc amendment to title I of the bill. These provisions address concerns that I have heard from many of my constituents regarding the impact of the new school-wide title 1 programs authorized under H.R. 6 on children from migrant families. I want to thank Chairman FORD and his staff for working with me on these amendments. I know that Chairman FORD has long been the leading advocate in Congress for migrant education programs and that his work on H.R. 6 reflects his concern for this population.

As you know, H.R. 6 provides schools with high populations of poor children the ability to establish school-wide programs that will benefit all the children in a school by combining Migrant Education Program funds and funds for other categorical programs. I think that the school-wide programs provide the opportunity for schools with large numbers of poor children to provide more coordinated services to a larger number of children.

Migrant Education Programs, part C of title I, provide supplemental services specifically designed to address the special needs of children from migratory families whose education is interrupted because of frequent family migration. These students do not necessarily enter a school at the beginning of the fall term and leave when the summer begins. They may enter several schools within a year. For them to be able to keep up with their peers and to receive a meaningful education they must have supplemental programs to help them bridge the gap from school to school. School-wide programs, which may well have a very different focus, should address the needs of migrant children. My amendment, which is now part of the chairman's en bloc amendment, contains two changes to H.R. 6 that will go a long way in addressing the continuing needs of migrant children.

First, the amendment would add a provision to section 10001 of H.R. 6, which deals with coordination of services, requiring that the health and welfare needs of children from migratory families be addressed in coordination of services. I believe that this provision is important in ensuring that the special needs of these children are not overlooked in a school operating a school-wide program.

Second, the amendment would require the Secretary of Education to report to Congress on how school-wide programs are meeting the needs of children from migratory families. The report would help preserve vital services to migrant students by identifying potential problem areas in school-wide programs, and making improvements on them, before it is too late.

H.R. 6 reaffirms the commitment of Congress to Federal education programs for children from migratory families. MEP programs are important and should not be ignored during implementation of schoolwide programs. I believe all of the provisions of my amendment address this concern.

Again, I thank the chairman for his help in this matter and urge that my colleagues support H.R. 6.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to support the final passage of H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act. This legislation will greatly improve teaching and learning in our public schools at a time when it is critical for our Nation to keep pace with the educational prowess of our international competitors. H.R. 6 meets this challenge by encouraging States to develop improved curricula tied to internationally competitive academic and workforce standards, promoting enhancements of instruction and by fostering both professional development and greater family and community involvement in schools.

The innovative approach to education reform embodied in H.R. 6 is long overdue. Studies have shown that while our economy, society and families have undergone dramatic changes, schools and instruction programs have remained stagnant. Long-term improvement in public education will only occur if states, local school districts and individual schools work together to achieve reform. H.R. 6 promotes this approach by creating a fully coordinated effort designed to produce a well-qualified and well-trained workforce that will meet both the increasingly complex and rapid technological challenges and the ever-growing aggressive competition of our international rivals.

During the opening days of debate on H.R. 6, my attendance was required in Oklahoma and I was unable to vote on two important home schooling amendments offered by Education and Labor Committee Chairman FORD and Congressman ARMEY. Had I been present, I would have voted for Congressman FORD's amendment and opposed the Armey amendment. The amendment by Mr. FORD deleted language in H.R. 6 which required each local educational agency within a State to certify each full-time teacher within the agency's jurisdiction. I believe that the removal of the certification language, and the addition of language which specifies that nothing in the bill impacts home schools, addresses the concerns of the home school supporters in my district in a constructive manner that maintains the overall integrity of the legislation. While I recognize the environment in which the Ford amendment was offered and support its adoption, I also believe that if we are to improve our public school education we must ensure that students are taught by qualified teachers and it is my hope that all public school teachers will soon be certified in the subject they teach.

I oppose Congressman ARMEY's proposal, known as the home school/private schools freedom amendment, because it contains overbroad language that could unintentionally restrict the participation of home schools, parochial schools and private schools in H.R. 6 programs. After careful study, I am in agreement with groups such as the Catholic Coalition and the Seventh Day Adventists, both of which support extensive parochial school education, that believe the Ford amendment adequately addresses the concerns that were raised by home school supporters without creating more potential problems by denying non-public schools from participating in the programs in H.R. 6.

Again, I would like to express my support for H.R. 6, Improving America's Schools Act. This legislation provides an innovative, well-coordinated framework that will allow our Nation's education system to advance into the next century. The challenges in that century, both from our international competitors and from the increasing complexity and potential of new technology, demand that this Nation rededicate itself to providing a solid educational foundation for all its citizens. H.R. 6 will help achieve that goal.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Chairman, I oppose H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act, in its present form because it is not in the best interests of the children, families, and school districts in Indiana's Fifth Congressional District. H.R. 6 attempts to impose Federal control and micromanagement of our schools while denying States and local school districts the flexibility necessary to best educate our children.

Universal prescriptions and mandates stemming from Washington are not going to help provide children with the basic reading and arithmetic skills needed to compete into the next century. True education and learning comes from partnership in learning between educators, parents, and students. States and localities need the flexibility to form curricula in accordance with the unique needs of the children they educate. A one-size-fits-all approach to education hardly suits the individual needs of all students.

Educators should be free to spend their time teaching our kids, not filling out forms. School superintendents across the Fifth District communicated to me that they are tired of layers of Federal regulations and funding contingencies. Overall, they believe programs funded under title I achieve results, so long as they can spend their time administering to their pupils rather than filling out forms. These school superintendents expressed that while they understand the necessity for regulation, and the need for accountability, the big Government regulations are burdensome, drain financial resources, and actually consume precious time that could be better-spent educating children.

Allow me to share a few examples. Dr. Randy Green, superintendent of Wabash City Schools in Wabash, IN, commented that he is burdened by the regulations imposed upon the schools under his jurisdiction. Further, while Federal and State programs are greatly appreciated, when these programs are unfunded they can be devastating to schools. In another example, a school superintendent in Grant County, IN, informed me that he prefers local and home control of schools, adding that there are too many rules and mandates requiring the administration of special programs, to the exclusion of basic educational schemes. He commented that education is becoming secondary in his school system while he tries to meet big Government unfunded mandates.

These are only two of many examples of comments from school superintendents within my district which clearly express the need for less regulation and Federal involvement. H.R. 6 is big on mandates and imposes a heavy hand on States and localities.

H.R. 6 includes opportunity to learn standards which are Federal mandates in disguise. These regulations require school districts to develop programs to meet Federal criteria while not requiring implementation of the standards. Nonetheless, opportunity to learn standards intrude on State flexibility and local control of school districts, while imposing a time consuming and arduous task on schools and their administrators. Why must we add another level of paperwork to schools that are pleading for less bureaucracy? If we are serious about cutting Government bureaucracy and allowing teachers to spend valuable time teaching our children, then opportunity to learn standards are the wrong means to that end.

Mr. Chairman, the reauthorization of the funds included in H.R. 6 is of the utmost importance to the schools within Indiana's Fifth Congressional District. However, through my contacts with over 50 school superintendents in Indiana I know that unfunded Federal mandates are going to place a strain on schools and their administrators.

Access to Federal funding is important, but at what expense? According to a school superintendent in a northwest portion of my district, given the amount of restrictions and paperwork necessary to qualify for title I funding, it is questionable whether it is worthwhile to expend such time in order to obtain this funding.

Also included in H.R. 6 was an amendment proposed by Congressman SAM JOHNSON which prohibits Federal funds from being directed to any school which effectively prevents students from exercising their constitutionally protected right to prayer in schools. I would like to go on record as strongly supportive of this amendment. The right to prayer or meditation is a constitutionally protected right which cannot be abridged by educational, or other institutions. We cannot allow forces, which already attempt to remove prayer from various sectors of public life, to impede on the right of our children to prayer and personal development. I greatly respect my colleague and appreciate his efforts in this regard.

It is time to control the heavy hand of big Government and oppose Federal micromanagement. We can rely on our State and local school boards to recognize what is best for our children. It is for these reasons that I remain opposed to H.R. 6.

Mr. FRANKS of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, while there are many positive things to say about American education today, there are also many problems. Students graduate our high schools without the knowledge needed to get a job. Too many students do not graduate at all. The school years of many urban children are filled with the dangers of violence, the temptations of drugs and personal irresponsibility, and the expectation of failure. The constituents of my Connecticut district, especially parents, have been looking for solutions to these problems. Goals 2000, which I voted for last fall, is the first step toward addressing these problems. H.R. 6, the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, is the second step.

Like debate in boards of education and State legislative bodies, debate in Congress over aspects of education are often bitter and divisive. Such is the case with this bill. I have kept in mind throughout the debate and amendment process that education is best when kept under local control. More programs, more paperwork, more mandates, and more bureaucracy is definitely not the way to reform education. Indeed, such problems have stifled the ability of school districts to help our disadvantaged children. I find especially disappointing the unwillingness of Congress to support tax vouchers, so that parents can choose to send their children to the school that will be the best for their child.

Not all of the provisions in this bill are totally in agreement with my philosophies on education. This is why I voted for the Michel Republican substitute to try to make this bill the best possible piece of legislation to help our Nation's children.

The Michel substitute gives schools the flexibility they need to adopt Federal programs to their own needs. It limits bureaucracy and paperwork so that schools can use Federal education funds to educate students rather than hiring more administrators. It requires the same high standards, fosters parental involvement, and helps States and school districts move toward technology-based education.

Unfortunately, the Michel amendment failed to pass. Nevertheless, I intend to vote for the final version of H.R. 6, because it includes programs worthy of enactment. I will outline my approval and objections to certain provisions in this bill that generated considerable debate on the floor.

One of the most welcome elements of this bill is the flexible Chapter 2 Block Grant Program. I realize that school districts across the country are at various points in their ongoing efforts to improve the education they provide. Each community has its own strengths and its own problems. Within my district, Waterbury, Danbury, and Meriden have special concerns not as pressing in the suburban areas of Connecticut. Chapter 2 encourages local innovation in the use of Federal funds for education reform.

I was pleased to see the Boehner amendment on public school choice added to the bill without needing a vote. Last year I was disappointed to see true school choice defeated during consideration of Goals 2000. This permission to school districts to allow parents educational choice among public schools receiving title 1 funds is the first step toward using competition as a way to improve our Nation's educational system.

Republicans and Democrats worked in committee to develop a title 1 formula that fairly distributes money to all areas of the country. Title 1 provides grants to school districts to provide educational services to disadvantaged children. Under the revised formula, title 1 funds in the bill, up to the 1994 level, will be distributed according to the formula that has been used in the past 5 years. Funds exceeding this level will be distributed under a new formula that gives more of the money to districts with a high percentage of poor families. Disadvantaged children living in relatively affluent areas will not lose the Federal assistance that they deserve, and school district budgets will not suffer from a drastic loss of Federal Funds.

This bill will also allow the Federal Government to award competitive grants for the planning and establishment of charter schools in local communities. Charter schools are publicly funded schools in which students not succeeding under standard methods of teaching are exposed to new methods of education. The federal government waives certain Federal laws and regulations to give these schools more room for innovation.

While President Clinton has greatly weakened the ability of the Office of National Drug Control Policy to fight the drug war, I still see drugs as a serious problem worthy of fighting at every level of government. This bill reauthorizes the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Programs, including the Drug Abuse Resistance Education Programs, commonly called DARE. I support the continuation of these programs, which have kept widespread drug abuse at bay during the past several years.

Congressman ROTH offered an amendment to eliminate from this bill all funds available to States for bilingual education programs. While I do not doubt that some bilingual programs have lost sight of the program goal—to teach students English in a short period of time—I do not think that eliminating Federal funds for bilingual education programs would help immigrant children to learn English. Children from homes where no English is spoken can benefit from teachers who speak their native language. States need to change and update bilingual education programs that are not working, but I do see a legitimate need for transitional programs that help children to master the language that unites our country of diversity.

One of my most serious objections to the original version of the bill was the inclusion of eight mandatory opportunity to learn standards written in the bill. The original version would have required States to set standards and issue reports on many different aspects of education that have traditionally been left to State and local governments. Areas in which the Federal Government planned to intrude included student-teacher ratios, teacher training, school facilities, and the number of library books. Besides increasing the paperwork burden on already burdened school systems, the bill did not provide any money for the development of these standards. Opportunity to learn standards are an expensive, incomplete, and simplistic way to try to improve our Nation's schools, and Congress has no business forcing school districts to adopt them.

I supported the Goodling amendment to greatly limit the influence of opportunity to learn standards in this bill. The Goodling amendment requires States to develop only two opportunity-to-learn standards only for schools that receive title 1 money. One standard would require school systems to develop, but not implement, ways to align its curricula and resources with standards developed by the State. The second standard would make sure teachers are able to teach subjects for which the State has adopted content and performance standards. Although I feel that all opportunity to learn standards should be completely voluntary, and not in Federal legislation, I recognize that this compromise will allow many good aspects of this bill to be passed.

Many parents in my district were concerned about language in the bill that would have imposed new Government control over private school teachers and parents who teach their children at home. In order to receive professional development funding from the original version of this bill, school districts may have had to prove that all fulltime teachers in the district were certified to teach their assigned subjects. This requirement could have been interpreted to apply to private school teachers and home schoolers, as well as public school teachers. I feel that the Federal Government has no business being involved with teacher certification issues, whether public, private, or home schoolers.

I voted for two amendments to solve this problem. First, I voted for the Ford amendment, which removed from the bill the requirement that school districts certify teachers in order to receive certain funding. I also voted for the Armey amendment, which states that nothing in the bill allows any Federal control over any aspect of private, religious, or home schools. These two amendments should relieve the concerns of my constituents who assert their right to choose private schools or home schooling.

Illegal immigrant children attending public schools is a serious problem for many school districts, including districts I represent. Illegal immigrants enter the country aware that our Nation's compassion for children will permit their children to get a free education courtesy of the American taxpayers. We need to squelch this incentive. Congressman ROHRABACHER attempted to amend this bill by requiring school systems receiving taxpayer money under H.R. 6 to count and report the number of children in their schools who are illegal immigrants or children of illegal immigrants. I supported an amendment to pay for this count with Federal funds, because immigration is a Federal problem. This amendment was never offered, because members permissive of illegal immigration wanted to provide a fiscal reason to oppose the Rohrabacher amendment. I voted for the Rohrabacher amendment because I believe in the need for immigration control, and I call on the Democrat leadership in Congress and President Clinton to address our Nation's illegal immigrant problem this year.

I hope that the next reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act includes the option for States and local school districts to develop school choice plans. I still believe that school choice will inspire self-initiated education reform more effective than any education program being approved in this bill today.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain the reasons for my vote on H.R. 6, the Elementary and Secondary Education Reauthorization. During the course of the debate on this bill, I have become very concerned with potential unfunded mandates that may result from its enactment. As a result of this concern, I have attempted to amend H.R. 6 so as to make the model opportunity-to-learn standards, contained in title 1, voluntary. I am somewhat pleased that an amendment was added to title 1 which stipulates that the implementation of opportunity-to-learn standards will be voluntary for States. Unfortunately, States will still have to develop these standards, even though they will not have to implement them. There are no doubt other mandates in H.R. 6 which may result in direct costs to States and local school districts. It has been reported that H.R. 6 contains 23 new reporting requirements for State and local education agencies.

For this reason, many have suggested that we defeat this legislation. And while H.R. 6 certainly has flaws and a better bill could probably be drafted, it is important to realize that H.R. 6 is must-pass legislation. The overwhelming majority of Federal programs for our public schools will receive their authority under H.R. 6. In order to continue these programs, such as chapter 1 and Even Start, we must reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. So just as I did earlier this week when I voted for the Goals 2000 education reform bill, I will be reluctantly casting my vote in support of H.R. 6.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do so just to say again that I thank the staff on both sides that worked hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of hours on this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to take time to say that I have some pretty ideal people on the minority side who serve on this committee. There is none that does his homework any more, there is no one on this committee on either side of the aisle that is better prepared whenever we come, whether it is a hearing or whether we are dealing with legislation, than the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

□ 2030

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as modified, as amended?

□ 2051

So the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend for five years the authorizations of appropriations for the programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and for certain other purposes.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the Report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3345) "An act to provide temporary authority to Government agencies relating to voluntary separation incentive payments, and for other purposes.".

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1636) "An act to authorize appropriations for the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 and to improve the program to reduce the incidental taking of marine mammals during the course of commercial fishing operations, and for other purposes."

FURTHER APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREE ON S. 349, LOBBYING DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1993

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAUGHLIN). Without objection, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR] to the committee of conference on S. 349 in place of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. FRANK].

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE WILLIAM D. FORD

(Mr. KILDEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate first that this bill, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, was passed as one of the great achievements of President Lyndon Johnson, and helping President Lyndon Johnson pass this bill in a very, very effective and grand way was Congressman BILL FORD.

Mr. Speaker, BILL FORD is leaving us this year. But let me say this personally, and I will have some time later to speak: No Member of Congress could have had a better mentor than I have had in BILL FORD. I am deeply appreciative of all that he has taught me. I am a much better legislator and a better human being because of BILL FORD.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter on H.R. 6, the bill just considered and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MORE CLINTON ADMINISTRATION NEWS

(Mr. DORNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to have to try and squeeze two 1-minutes into one, because of the rush of news today.

Last night on this floor, I called for the resignation or firing of Joycelyn Elders. I have just asked permission to put into the RECORD the letter written by Cardinal Hickey, the Archbishop of Washington, DC., and environs, to the President demanding that he disavow and censure Joycelyn Elders, the Surgeon General, for her remarks which appeared in a homosexual publication, The Advocate. This is the second time in just 8 months that an Archbishop has written forcefully to condemn the remarks of this Surgeon General. At this point I would like to submit that letter.

Now I find in the paper a second issue, which I missed yesterday: "Of the 1,000 FBI background checks of White House personnel, more than 500 revealed derogatory information that would have prevented these people from obtaining FBI security clearances. The FBI found cases of past drug use, drug convictions, years of unpaid taxes, unpaid debts, and financial irregularities, all discrepancies that are grounds for Secret Service questions." The White House denies this and says it is only 100.

Do you remember my words here last September and October, Mr. Speaker? I said that Bill Clinton could not have gotten a security clearance to serve in any agency of any administration. Only by getting elected President could he obtain a clearance.

The flower generation, the hippie sixties generation, has come to Washington, DC, and it is a nightmare. The Wall Street Journal today printed a letter written by DAN GLICKMAN and LARRY COMBEST, good men from the Select Committee on Intelligence. It is a letter asking CIA Director Woolsey what steps he has taken to ensure that classified material has not fallen into the hands of those who do not have proper clearance. It is a letter I asked him to write.

I will include with my remarks the entire Wall Street Journal editorial with the letter from the chairman and ranking Republican of the Committee on Intelligence.

REVIEW AND OUTLOOK—PATSY TAKES THE FISKE

White House notoriety Patsy Thomasson actually showed up to testify to Congress Tuesday, and proved herself charming. She did little to still concerns about the administration's security procedures, however, and on the matter of her nocturnal visit to Vincent Foster's office in the wake of his death she pleaded the Fiske.

Ms. Thomasson "would like nothing better," she said, than to tell the subcommittee "what I did that night in that office." But due to Special Counsel Robert Fiske's probe into Mr. Foster's death, she couldn't possibly comment on that. Ms. Thomasson, in case you've spent the last month as an orbiting astronaut, is the FOB from Arkansas who was once the top aide of FOB bond dealer and drug convict Dan Lasater, and who has risen in life to be director of the Office of Administration at the White House, where she oversees personnel, computers and some security operations.

These responsibilities seem to weigh heavily in this administration. The White House Counsel's office is responsible for security passes, the immediate responsibility of Associate Counsel William Kennedy III, the former Rose Law Firm partner now tottering on the brink of resignation (maybe by tonight's 7:30 press conference?) over a nanny-tax issue. Last night, the White House said Mr. Kennedy would no longer handle passes.

The security situation is so dire that Congressmen Dan Glickman and Larry Combest, Chairman and ranking minority member of the House Intelligence Committee, have written the Director of Central Intelligence (see text below) more or less suggesting that he cut the White House off from classified information.

More specifically, they asked CIA Director James Woolsey what steps he had taken to ensure that White House staffers without clearances hadn't had access to classified material. The two Members said they were troubled, and that "The urgency of this matter has been highlighted by the arrest of Aldrich Ames," (for astronauts, the recently apprehended KGB mole in the CIA).

When Ms. Thomasson responded to similar concerns expressed this week by House subcommittee chair Steny Hoyer, a Maryland Democrat, she was hardly reassuring. "We don't think we have any Aldrich Ameses at the White House," Ms. Thomasson responded. "But we certainly could." Ms. Thomasson admits that she lacked a permanent White House pass or security clearance until earlier this month; despite that, she has had 24-hour access to the West Wing. At one point in her testimony, she also said she had "no need" to have the combinations to any safes in the White House; they are in the possession of Charles Easley, a security officer who works for her.

She also revealed that while Mr. Kennedy was handling clearances for White House passes, his own background check was finished in March 1993, but he didn't receive his own permanent pass until December. GOP Rep. Frank Wolf, who first agitated these issues on the House subcommittee that oversees the White House budget, told us that White House Chief of Staff McLarty's background check was completed on January 22, 1993—two days after the inauguration. He didn't get his permanent pass until just this past March 5, the day Mr. Fiske's first subpoenas arrived at the White House. House Members wanted to know what was going on.

Ms. Thomasson, however, persisted in telling Rep. Wolf on Tuesday not to worry. She said there was no reason for concern that senior White House aides lacked permanent passes because they nonetheless had gotten "requisite security" approval. She holds that Mr. McLarty's case was "fully adjudicated," which apparently means the background check was complete and accepted by Mr. Kennedy, who just hadn't gotten around to forwarding the Chief of Staff's papers to the Secret Service.

This is "malarkey," says Phil Larsen, who was administrative officer in Jimmy Carter's White House and ran personnel management under President Bush. The Secret Service must clear a final financial check, and is part of an adjudication. "None of this makes any sense," he told us; it would be "astonishing" if security clearances were issued before passes were. "The two always—and should—go together.

After sleeping overnight on Patsy's testimony, Rep. Wolf and Rep. Bill Clinger, ranking Republican on the Government Operations Committee, called for a GAO investigation of the White House pass problem.

At 8:15 p.m. last night, AP reported Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers had suddenly issued a "fact sheet" indicating that more than 100 White House staffers lack security clearances and one-third of the 1,044 employees don't have permanent passes.

OFFICE OF THE ARCHBISHOP,
Washington, DC, March 21, 1994.
The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT, I must take strong exception to the recent remarks of the Surgeon General, Joycelyn Elders, advocating homosexual behavior and the expressing support for adoption by so-called homosexual couples. Furthermore, I deeply regret her apparent intolerance of people whose religious faith and moral values collide with her own ill-considered views.

The Surgeon General irresponsibly accuses religious leaders of holding that human sexuality is solely for procreation. Her words are a misleading caricature. In our Catholic tradition the two fundamental purposes of human sexuality—the expression of the committed love of husband and wife and openness to new human life—are linked together. Human sexuality is a great gift from God which enables couples to express their love for one another and in the context of that love to create and care for a family. Such a view is supported both by faith and reason; it does not involve the suppression of human sexuality but rather its right use for the good of individuals and society.

The strength of our country, Mr. President, has always been in the vitality of our families, not in the might of our weapons. By contrast, the breakdown of the family has been the root of so many of the social problems which, as a nation, we now struggle to overcome. The comments of Surgeon General Elders are destructive of a true understanding of family life. It is one thing to defend the human rights of homosexual men and women; it is quite another to encourage, as she does, a life-style which puts so-called homosexual unions on a par with marriage and family and condones homosexual behavior among young people.

Mr. President, I strongly urge you to take responsibility for the Surgeon General's harmful and offensive remarks and publicly to disavow them. Respectfully I ask that you urge Dr. Elders to be more tolerant of religious teachings with respect to human sexuality. Whether she knows it or not, the religious teachings, leaders and institutions which her remarks attack are vitally important to solving many of our nation's social ills.

Sincerely in Christ,
JAMES CARDINAL HICKEY,
Archbishop of Washington.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 232. Concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the two Houses.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members are recognized for 5 minutes each.

BANKS, DERIVATIVES, AND HEDGE FUNDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor today to update my colleagues about the Banking Committee's efforts to ensure the safety and soundness of the financial system. Over the past 6 months the Banking Committee has been monitoring the rapid growth of newfangled financial instruments called derivatives and I have ordered my staff to draft legislation that would call for further regulation of derivatives.

As part of our review of the risks posed by derivatives, the Committee has been studying one of the major purchasers of derivative products—hedge funds. Bank lending to these highly leveraged and largely unregulated investment funds raises a number of serious safety and soundness questions about hedge funds and their use of derivatives.

Hedge funds are one of the largest purchasers of derivative products from banks, and that status alone makes them worthy of scrutiny. But hedge funds deserve extra scrutiny because their massive financial clout, fueled by large credit lines from banks, is used for speculative purposes. This speculative activity has grown so great that it has a tremendous effect on the stability of our financial markets.

The Congress and regulators must make sure that they understand the impact of hedge funds on the stability of our financial markets and the banking system. Based on recent events, it appears that hedge funds are increasingly being viewed as a growing threat to the stability of our financial system. The only way to understand that threat is to learn more about hedge funds, debunk the myths, and develop supervisory strategies to control those risks. To execute that strategy the regulators must begin to require greater disclosure about bank exposure to hedge funds and the securities regulators need to require greater information about hedge fund operations.

As a first step to ensuring that the regulators are learning all they can about the risks posed by hedge funds, the Committee will hold a hearing to explore the implications of bank exposure to hedge funds on Wednesday, April 13.

BACKGROUND ON HEDGE FUNDS

Generally, there is very little publicly available data on hedge funds because hedge funds deliberately structure their activities so as to avoid regulation, including public disclosure. It is not uncommon for a hedge fund to have its trading offices located in some exotic tax haven that does not require public disclosure of the fund trading activities.

There is no precise definition of a hedge fund, but basically a hedge fund is a speculative investment vehicle that uses sophisticated techniques to trade a wide range of currencies, securities and commodities. They offer high-risk, high-profit investments to investors, usually wealthy individuals who can afford to take the risks.

In legal form hedge funds are commonly structured as private limited partnerships organized in the U.S. or a foreign corporations in an offshore tax haven. Organizing in this way permits hedge fund to avoid most domestic regulation. They are exempt from most securities laws and because they are partnerships or off-shore corporation they do not pay U.S. taxes. Without these important legal distinctions hedge fund activities would be severely curtailed.

Each hedge fund partnership has a general partner that is responsible for managing the fund, making investment decisions and raising new capital. The general partner often have a large personal stake in the fund. The general partner receives a fee for managing the fund and on top of that, typically takes 20 percent of all fund profits.

Hedge funds are usually highly leveraged. In other words, they use borrowed money to engage in many of their activities. Banks and securities firms are a key source of funds for hedge funds. Hedge funds are also one of the largest purchasers of derivatives and they rely on banks to supply both derivative products and credit, yet there is little available data on the exact magnitude of derivative product sales to hedge funds or even bank credit exposure to hedge funds.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission [CFTC] is the only financial regulatory agency with any regular reporting contact with hedge funds. In the futures market the CFTC requires reporting which identifies the positions of large traders such as hedge funds. The CFTC's large trader reporting authority derives from the Commodities Exchange Act which requires large traders to and position holders in particular futures contracts to maintain books and records of their transactions and positions in both futures and cash market for particular commodities.

Information on hedge funds is sometimes reportable by brokers and dealers under the Securities Exchange Commission's [SEC's] large trading reporting requirement, but these regulations cover only publicly traded corporate equities and options.

Hedge funds are subject to the Securities Exchange Act which requires investors to report large positions in equity securities. Also some investment managers of hedge funds that exercise investment discretion with respect to equity securities must file quarterly reports with the SEC regarding their equity positions.

RECENT LOSSES RAISES CONCERNS

The recent collapse of European bond prices was the latest warning bell that illustrates the potential risks posed by hedge funds. Press reports indicate that hedge funds made massive but incorrect bets on the direction of European bond prices and the result was staggering losses. The newspapers are full of stories about hedge funds losses. For example, one headline reads "Soros Empire Unfazed by Loss of $600 million." George Soros' runs the largest hedge fund called the Quantum Fund which reportedly has over $10 billion in assets under management. The Fund reportedly lost in the neighborhood of $600 million in 1 day. Other funds have had similar experiences. I will invite Mr. Soros and other fund managers to testify on April 13 when I plan hearings on the risk these funds pose to banks.

Recent headlines also suggest that the massive losses are understandably matched by a growing regulatory concern over hedge funds. One headline reads, "Central Bankers Inquire Into Hedge Fund Risks," while another reads, "SEC Is Concerned About Hedge Funds." Coupled with the recent market turbulence over the Federal Reserve's decision to raise interest rates, it is easy to understand why the regulators and even the Congress are jittery about hedge funds and their effect on the stability of our financial system.

It is reasonable to ask how a hedge fund could lose $600 million in one day. In great part the explanation lies in the growth of hedge fund financial clout and the highly leveraged nature of hedge fund operations—big gains means big risks, and big risks mean big losses.

Hedge funds have approximately $75 billion under management. The hedge funds apparently leverage that capital with bank loans ranging from $5 to $20 for every $1 under management. In other words, these funds could conceivably control anywhere between $375 billion and $1.5 trillion in financial clout. The funds can then further leverage that amount by buying options and other derivatives.

To place hedge fund financial clout in perspective, the average daily volume of currency transactions is estimated in the $1 trillion range, while the world's largest stock exchange, the New York Stock Exchange, has a daily trading volume of roughly $10 billion.

Given their financial muscle, it is easy to see how hedge funds can move markets and worry regulators. It is also easy to see that given their aggressive activities, hedge funds have the potential to cause market disruptions and increase volatility—both threats to banks that are heavily involved in the securities and derivatives businesses.

CONCERNS RAISED BY HEDGE FUNDS

Hedge funds pose several major risks to our financial system and the regulators and the Congress must take aggressive steps to investigate those risks. One threat risk is systemic while the other relates to the level of individual bank exposure to hedge funds. Both of these risks are magnified by the lack of information on hedge fund activities and the lack of any reliable numbers on bank exposure to hedge funds. Without proper information, it is impossible to gauge the level of risk hedge funds pose to our financial system. In addition, the regulators can do little to limit bank exposure to hedge funds without such information. In other words, not knowing the data, no one can build a safety net.

Examples of problems that could arise from hedge fund activities are easy to envision. A large hedge fund fails and defaults on billions in loans to several large derivatives dealing banks. On top of that, the hedge fund defaults on its side of billions in derivatives contracts which sets off a chain reaction panic in the highly concentrated derivatives market. Rumors would be raised about the dealer banks' ability to handle the defaults.

Events like this would place severe stress on the derivatives markets and the credit markets and the financial system would likely grind to a halt over fears that the large banks could not meet their obligations. Confidence, the key underpinning of our financial system could easily be shaken to the core.

This scenario alone should provide enough impetus for the regulators to gather more information in order to better understand bank exposure to hedge funds. While the hedge funds and banks will tell us that the above scenario is highly unlikely, in the real world such missteps are all too real. We need to prepare for all possibilities in order to protect the integrity of our financial system.

I have asked the regulators if they are prepared to deal with potential hedge fund problems. I have also asked for detailed information on bank exposure to hedge funds and an explanation of the systemic risks that hedge funds pose to our financial system. And I am not the only person expressing concern about hedge funds.

CENTRAL BANKERS CONCERNED

The G-10 Central Bank governors convene regularly at the Bank for International Settlements [BIS] to discuss international monetary issues. Earlier this year the central banks began asking questions about hedge fund operations. Recent press reports indicate that several of the world's central banks have begun investigating hedge funds after the huge losses of the funds incurred in the European bond markets.

The central banks are concerned over the risks that hedge funds pose to the stability of the world's financial system and the risks to individual banks. One newspaper reported that the Bank of England is holding talks with United Kingdom clearing and merchant banks and has sent them a questionnaire seeking a clearer picture of the risks involved and the extent of bank exposure to hedge funds.

Another paper reported that the Federal Reserve has undertaken an informal but similar survey of the major U.S. banks in order to gather information on the effect of hedge funds on bank safety and soundness and the systemic risks posed by the funds.

These efforts are necessary because there is very little publicly available data on bank exposure to hedge funds. I liken the current situation to the recent experience with highly leveraged transactions. In that case the regulators had no systemic data on bank exposure to highly leveraged transactions and they were unable to gauge the safety and soundness risks posed by bank lending on highly leveraged transactions. In order to get a better handle on those risks, those regulators eventually forced the banks to provide detailed information on their exposure to highly leverage transactions.

The same should happen with respect to bank exposure to hedge funds. It is impossible to gauge the risks of exposure to hedge funds without an accurate picture of the exposure. Chairman Greenspan recently stated that before bank supervisors can develop effective supervisory strategies to deal with derivatives, it was imperative that banks supply additional information on derivatives. For that same reason I want the regulators to require banks to provide additional reporting on their exposure to hedge funds.

DINGELL, MARKEY AND SEC CONCERNED ABOUT HEDGE FUNDS

On March 10, 1994, Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman DINGELL and Telecommunications and Finance Subcommittee Chairman MARKEY wrote to the Treasury Secretary and SEC Chairman expressing concern over hedge funds and asking for greater disclosure of hedge fund operations.

Independent of that action, Mr. Arthur Levitt, the Chairman of the SEC, recently stated that he was concerned about hedge funds' impact on the stock markets and the SEC's limited ability to monitor the funds. He also stated that the SEC was working on measures to improve hedge fund reporting.

These initiatives will allow the government to better monitor the impact of trading by such funds in the nation's securities markets and take steps to limit risks to the financial system.

SINGLE REGULATOR

I want to reiterate that the public would be much better served by the existence of a single bank regulator to deal with complex issues such as derivatives and hedge funds. Each regulator has a slightly different orientation and philosophy toward derivatives and hedge funds and what steps should be taken to ensure safety and soundness. We need a unified, uniformly applied policy.

CONCLUSION

The 1992 Joint Report on the Government Securities Market, conducted by the Treasury Department, Federal Reserve and SEC provides important insight into how hedge funds can negatively affect a market. The report states:

> Events in the government securities markets have shown that their capacity for leverage allows hedge funds to take large trading positions disproportionate of their capital base. However the sheer size of the positions taken by hedge funds raises concerns about systemic risk that these fund may introduce into the financial markets. Regulators currently have little information that might help them assess the market impact of a failure of a hedge fund or that would warn of impending failure.

The landscape has not changed in the last two years. Before we get to the crisis stage with hedge funds, all the regulators should develop the means to better understand the risks posed by hedge funds. This can only be done by increased disclosure. For their part, bank regulators should require greater disclosure of bank exposure to hedge funds. In addition, hedge funds should no longer be exempt from prudent safety and soundness regulations as called for under the securities laws.

The Congress must ensure that the regulators have an adequate understanding of and clear policies to deal with the systemic and operational risks posed by hedge funds. It is also the responsibility of the Congress to ensure that supervision of bank derivative activities and hedge funds is adequate.

I will have more to say on this in the near future. Meanwhile, I want to emphasize that the concern I have is shared by many and I intend to bring to light the risks hedge funds pose, and bring into being the polices needed to control those risks.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, March 24, 1994.

Hon. ALAN GREENSPAN,
Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN GREENSPAN: On April 13, 1994 at 10:00 a.m., in Room 2128, Rayburn House Office Building, the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs will hold a hearing to explore safety and soundness issues related to bank holding company involvement with hedge funds. You or your designee is invited to testify at the hearing.

So that the Committee may better understand the various safety and soundness issues involving the relationship between bank holding companies and hedge funds, please provide written answers to the following questions with your testimony.

1. GENERAL INFORMATION

How does the Federal Reserve define hedge funds? Please provide a list of hedge funds, including their balance sheet and income statement data and total assets under management. Is there any available measure of the degree of leverage that hedge funds employ? In what markets do hedge funds operate?

2. BANK HOLDING COMPANY/HEDGE FUND RELATIONSHIP

What is total bank holding company (BHC) exposure to hedge funds? Please include totals for extensions of credit, guarantees, derivatives exposure, etc. What is the total BHC credit risk exposure to hedge funds?

Please list all the BHC services provided to hedge funds and the revenue derived from those services. Are any BHC investors in hedge funds? Do any bank holding companies act as investment advisors to hedge funds?

3. HEDGE FUNDS AS DERIVATIVES CUSTOMERS

In dollar and quantity terms, what percentage of BHC OTC derivatives contracts are purchased by hedge funds? What percentage of BHC exchange traded derivatives contracts are p666X by hedge funds?

Are there any restrictions or prohibitions on the sharing of hedge fund derivative purchases with BHC trading account operations? Would a Chinese Wall between these activities limit bank trading account speculation?

4. FEDERAL RESERVE MONITORING OF HEDGE FUNDS

Does the Federal Reserve require BHC's to report any information on their exposure to hedge funds? Has the Federal Reserve performed any studies on bank exposure to hedge funds? Is the Federal Reserve currently monitoring bank exposure to hedge funds? Do hedge funds cooperate with Federal Reserve requests for information?

5. HEDGE FUNDS AND SYSTEMIC RISK

What risks do hedge funds pose to the safety and soundness of the banking system? For example, how would the failure of a large hedge fund and the ensuing default on derivatives contracts affect BHC's and the derivatives market?

Recent press accounts indicate that the Federal Reserve and other central banks discussed the systemic risks to the world financial system posed by hedge funds. What were the results of that meeting? Does the Federal Reserve contemplate taking any action that would curb the aggressive trading strategies of hedge funds? Does the Federal Reserve have any contingency plans should a large hedge fund fail?

6. HEDGE FUNDS AND TREASURY SECURITIES MARKET

The "Joint Report on the Government Securities Market" (January 1992) raises concerns about the influence hedge funds have on the government securities market. The report also noted that hedge funds provide only limited information on their activities in this market. Please update the Committee on developments since the report was published. Are hedge fund activities still a concern to the efficient operation of the government securities market? Do hedge funds provide adequate information on their activities in this market? Does the Federal Reserve have similar concerns about hedge fund activities in other markets?

7. INCREASED REPORTING

You recently stated that before supervisors can develop effective supervisory strategies to deal with derivatives, it was imperative that banks supply additional information. For that same reason it seems to make sense that banks provide regulators and/or the public with information on their exposure to hedge funds. I also note that House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Dingell has urged the SEC to require hedge funds to make greater disclosures.

Does the Federal Reserve have any plans to require BHC's to report on hedge fund exposure?

8. ADEQUATE NETTING ARRANGEMENTS WITH TAX-HAVEN COUNTRIES

For various reasons, some hedge funds are chartered in tax-haven countries and these hedge funds purchase derivatives from banks. Is the Federal Reserve concerned over the adequacy of netting arrangements with tax-haven countries?

Finally, please provide additional comments or recommendations your agency has on the BHC/hedge fund relationship and the need for improved reporting of that relationship.

You will be given 5 minutes to summarize your written remarks. Banking Committee rules require that 200 copies of your written testimony be delivered to Room 2129, Rayburn House Office Building, no later than noon on April 12, 1994.

Thank you for your time and cooperation. The Committee looks forward to your testimony.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,
HENRY B. GONZALEZ,

Does the CFTC have adequate authority and resources to monitor hedge funds? Has the CFTC performed any studies on hedge funds? Is the CFTC currently monitoring any aspect of hedge fund operations or contemplating improvements in regulations applicable to hedge funds?

4. SYSTEMIC PROBLEMS WITH HEDGE FUNDS

Is the CFTC concerned about the impact hedge fund have on the financial markets? Does the CFTC have any concerns about hedge fund use of derivative products? What steps has the CFTC taken to address those concerns? Does the CFTC contemplate taking any action that would curb the aggressive trading strategies of hedge funds?

4. SEC MONITORING OF HEDGE FUNDS

Recent press accounts indicate that the SEC is concerned about the ways that hedge fund impact the financial markets and the Commission's limited ability to monitor hedge funds. What steps has the SEC taken to address those concerns? Has the SEC performed any studies on hedge funds? Is the SEC currently monitoring any aspect of hedge fund operations? Does the SEC contemplate taking any action that would curb the aggressive trading strategies of hedge funds?

5. LARGE TRADER REPORTING SYSTEM

In a 1992 Report to Congress the SEC stated that the "large trader reporting system" for equity securities and the "large position reporting system" for government securities would, when implemented, provide the Commission with adequate information about the systematic effect of hedge funds on those two markets. Please update the Committee on the implementation of these systems, and describe their usefulness in addressing systemic issues. Are any other reporting requirements necessary to ensure the SEC has a clear grasp of hedge funds' impact on the markets?

Finally, feel free to provide additional comments or recommendations related to hedge funds.

DEAR COMPTROLLER LUDWIG: On April 13, 1994 at 10:00 a.m., in Room 2128, Rayburn House Office Building, the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs will hold a hearing to explore various safety and soundness issues related to bank involvement with hedge funds. You are invited to testify at the hearing.

So that the Committee may better understand the various safety and soundness issues involving the relationship between banks and hedge funds, please provide written answers to the following questions with your testimony.

1. GENERAL INFORMATION

How does the OCC define hedge funds? Please provide a list of hedge funds with significant exposure to banks including their balance sheet and income statement data and assets under management. Is there any available measure of the degree of leverage that hedge funds employ? In what markets do hedge funds operate?

2. BANK/HEDGE FUND RELATIONSHIP

What is total bank exposure to hedge funds? Please include totals for extensions of credit, guarantees, derivatives exposure, etc. What is the total bank credit risk exposure to hedge funds?

Please list all the banking services provided to hedge funds and the revenue derived from those services. Are any banks investors in hedge funds? Do any banks act as investment advisors to hedge funds?

3. OCC MONITORING OF HEDGE FUNDS

Please describe the means used by the OCC to evaluate the degree of bank credit risk exposure to hedge funds. Does the OCC require banks to report any information on their exposure to hedge funds? Has the OCC performed any studies on bank exposure to hedge funds? Is the OCC currently monitoring bank exposure to hedge funds? Does the OCC have any plans to require banks to report on hedge fund exposure?

Since hedge funds are not rated by the independent credit agencies, based on what information do banks lend to hedge funds? Do hedge funds provide adequate data for banks to make credit decisions? Does the fact that a hedge fund is also usually a purchaser of derivatives sway the banks credit decisions in any way?

4. HEDGE FUNDS AS BANK DERIVATIVES CUSTOMERS

In dollar and quantity terms, what percentage of bank OTC derivatives contracts are purchased by hedge funds? What percentage of exchange traded derivatives contracts are purchased by hedge funds?

Are there any restrictions or prohibitions on the sharing of information on hedge fund purchases of derivative products between bank derivative operations and bank trading account operations?

5. HEDGE FUNDS AND SYSTEMIC RISK

What risks do hedge funds pose to the safety and soundness of the banking system? For example, how would the failure of a large hedge fund and the ensuring default on derivatives contracts affect banks and the derivatives market?

Does the OCC contemplate taking any action that would curb the aggressive trading strategies of hedge funds? Does the OCC have any contingency plans should a large hedge fund fail?

6. ADEQUATE NETTING ARRANGEMENTS WITH TAX HAVE COUNTRIES

For various reasons, some hedge funds are chartered in tax-haven countries and these hedge funds purchase derivatives from banks. Is the OCC concerned over the adequacy of netting arrangements with tax-haven countries?

Finally, please provide additional comments or recommendations your agency has on the BHC/hedge fund relationship and the need for improved reporting of that relationship.

You will be given 5 minutes to summarize your written remarks. Banking Committee rules require that 200 copies of your written testimony be delivered to Room 2129, Rayburn House Office Building, no later than noon, April 12, 1994.

Thank you for your time and cooperation. The Committee looks forward to your testimony.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

HENRY B. GONZALEZ,
Chairman.

HONORING OVETA CULP HOBBY AT MARY HARDIN-BAYLOR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EDWARDS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, The University of Mary Hardin-Baylor in Belton, Texas will honor Oveta Culp Hobby at their 1994 homecoming on April 16th. It is my privilege to share the history of this remarkable woman who will be honored for the contributions and sacrifices she has made in service to our country.

Oveta Culp Hobby was born in Killeen, Texas, on January 19, 1905. The second of seven children, she was graduated from Temple High School. She attended Mary Hardin-Baylor College, now known as the University of Mary Hardin-Baylor, in Belton, Texas. In 1956 the University awarded her an honorary doctorate in the humanities.

The Killeen native was married to William Pettus Hobby in 1931 and they had two children, Jessica and William. Mrs. Hobby and her husband purchased the Houston Post and worked together editing and publishing their newspaper. She also involved herself in numerous community activities such as serving as a member of the board of the Houston Museum of Fine Arts, a member of the Junior League, and president of the Texas League of Women Voters.

In 1942, Oveta Culp Hobby put aside her business career, family, and civic duties when she was called to serve her country in World War II. Her first assignment was to head the Army's Bureau of Public Relations section. The section she headed was responsible for the promotion of the Army to wives and mothers of service men. A year later, Secretary of War Henry Stimson and General George C. Marshall gave her the task of finding what role women could fill in the country's efforts to defeat the Axis powers. Her duties included explaining before congressional panels a plan she helped develop for an Army corps consisting only of women.

These army units became known as the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps or WACs. Because of her efforts, Oveta Culp Hobby was asked to command this newly commissioned corps, becoming the first female commander of a military unit in the U.S. Army. Under her direction, the WACs were transformed into a highly effective force that performed numerous duties critical to the country's war effort.

After three years of dedicated service to her country, Mrs. Hobby left the Army. For her distinguished service, she was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, becoming the first woman to receive this prestigious award.

Following her military service, Oveta Culp Hobby resumed her career as director of KPRC–AM & FM and KPRC–TV and as editor and chairman of the board of the Houston Post. She also returned to her extensive involvement in civic groups. She served on the boards of the Advertising Federation of America, the American Design Award Committee, the American National Red Cross, the American Cancer Society, the American Society of Newspaper Editors, and the American Assembly. In 1948, she became a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information and the Press in Geneva, Switzerland. Oveta Culp Hobby's contributions to her country's did not end with her military service. She worked closely with three U.S. presidents including Franklin D. Roosevelt, Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Lyndon B. Johnson. President Eisenhower appointed her to the post of Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in 1953. The appointment made her the second woman to be appointed to a cabinet-level position and the first person to head the department. President Johnson appointed her to the National Advisory Commission of Selective Service. At his personal request, she flew to Vietnam as a member of the Health, Education and Welfare Task Force in 1966. As is evident, Oveta Culp Hobby is a multi-faceted woman deserving the highest recognition. She is to be commended and honored for having the strength to balance everything from being a wife, a mother, and a civic leader, to serving as a corporate executive and as a high ranking officer in the U.S. Army. Her vast leadership abilities come as no surprise to those who know her background and family. Her father, Ike W. Culp, was elected to the Texas State Legislature, and her husband served as the Governor of Texas. Her son, William, served as the Lieutenant Governor of Texas for 18 years.

Through her courageous leadership and selfless service to her country, Oveta Culp Hobby has paved the way for women who wish to serve in the armed services, enter the business world or take their place in the political realm. Her accomplishments are an example for all to follow. It is with great honor that I pay tribute to Oveta Culp Hobby for the many contributions and for the dedicated service she has given to our great country.

WHY MILK WITH rBGH NEEDS TO BE LABELED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the entire process by which the FDA approved Monsanto's rBGH, as well as their recently published labeling guidelines. The Food and Drug Administration can only blame itself for the growing opposition to Monsanto's bovine growth hormone rBGH, the synthetic drug that will force cows to produce 20 percent more milk than they naturally do.

FDA says they found rBGH safe. More accurately, they found that rBGH is a manageable risk. Unfortunately, it is an unnecessary risk that comes with no benefits. FDA says that no significant difference has been found between the milk from cows treated with rBGH and untreated cows. They don't say that rBGH treatments do change the composition of milk, and do result in synthetic rBGH residues in milk.

FDA takes the position that rBGH milk can't be labeled because there is no way to test for rBGH residues. Why not? The American Medical Association's Scientific Advisory Council states, matter of factly, that a test could be devised to detect synthetic rBGH in the milk from rBST treated animals. Other independent scientists also say an rBGH residue test can be developed. Why hasn't FDA required it? Because Monsanto knows that, given the choice, consumers will reject milk produced with synthetic hormones.

Sadly, the FDA's new labeling guidance not only discourages labeling, it has become the basis for Monsanto's lawsuits against companies who want to label. Monsanto lawyers have gone so far as to enclose the FDA's guidelines in letters threatening legal action against companies who label their products as free of rBGH.

Imagine: farmers being sued for telling consumers that they are not using a synthetic hormone—a hormone that FDA admits presents a risk to consumers and a health threat to cows.

FDA generally must find an animal drug safe and effective for its intended use. But rBGH, when used as directed, makes cows sicker—the drug's own label says so. In addition to significant increases in clinical mastitis, an udder infection that results in "visibly abnormal milk," the label for Monsanto's rBGH product, Posilac, cites reduced pregnancy rates, increases in cystic ovaries, disorders of the uterus, increases in retained placenta, digestive disorders, disorders of the foot, and increased body temperature among the problems caused by rBGH treatments. It also says that rBGH will result in "increased use of antibiotics in cows." FDA days don't worry. Take the risk.

Is rBGH worth the risk? Remember that rBGH is purely a production drug. It has no therapeutic or social value. It does not cure a disease or solve a health problem. It just makes cows produce more milk—at a time when we already have a surplus of milk.

Nor have all the questions about safety to humans been settled. The Consumer Policy Institute of Consumers Union (publishers of Consumer Reports magazine) wrote FDA in May 1993, questioning among other things the possible effects of BGH on human health via its effects on the substance IGF-1. FDA did not respond to their letter.

You can't blame consumers and farmers for wondering why FDA has consistently failed to respond to serious questions about the rBGH review process, and why the Agency has chosen to put the financial interests of a huge chemical company above the interests of the public.

There should be no question but that consumers have the right to know if their milk and dairy products were produced with synthetic growth hormones. And there is no doubt that FDA is cooperating with Monsanto to rob consumers of that right. Consumers, more and more aware of what they eat and how their food is produced have, in consumer survey after consumer survey, voiced overwhelming opposition to adding synthetic bovine growth hormone to their milk supply. That concern must not be ignored.

The FDA, in dealing with Monsanto, has shown itself incapable of protecting the needs of consumers and family farmers. It appears that State governments will have to do what the FDA has not done. I'm very proud that the State of Vermont has led the way in protecting consumer rights by recently passing legislation which will require the labelling of all milk products from cows injected with rBGH. Hopefully, other States and the U.S. Congress will soon follow.

Until the questions are answered, consumers and farmers should beware. And milk from rBGH treated cows should be labelled.

□ 2110

Mr. Speaker, there are many other unanswered questions about rBGH, But I think the American people have the right to demand that the FDA support the right of companies and farmers to label their product very clearly as not coming from rBGH-infected cows.

ECONOMIC WELL-BEING OF RURAL AMERICA DESERVES IMMEDIATE ATTENTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the Nation's attention has been focused on the economic plight of our inner cities, but I believe that the economic well-being of rural America has reached a critical point and deserves our immediate attention.

Rural communities are rapidly losing population as jobs dry-up. From 1980-1990, the census showed more than 50 percent of the country's rural counties lost population. Average rural unemployment for the decade was almost 9 percent. Furthermore, by the beginning of this decade, almost a quarter of all farm households had incomes below the poverty line, more than twice the national average. In my rural 1st District of North Carolina, the average poverty rate is 26 percent.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for Congress to take action to unlock the potential economic power of rural America. In a time of limited Federal resources, we in Congress must seize upon the opportunities available to leverage private resources and ensure that existing programs are used to their utmost.

We all know that agriculture and its related industries are the economic pillars upon which rural communities were built. But over the years, agriculture and rural businesses have changed dramatically. In this context, I believe that Congress must act now to adapt public policy to meet the challenges facing rural America.

As rural communities have become less dependent on agriculture, farmers have become more dependent on the jobs provided by those communities. Off-farm income now accounts for more than 80 percent of the average income of farmers. Almost half now receive a majority of their income from nonfarm sources. Today more than ever, agriculture depends on a healthy and growing rural economy.

In this fight to revitalize rural America, local leaders tell us that specific plans, tailored to unique local resources and needs, are the most effective efforts. Communities are trying to attract start-up businesses, expand existing enterprises, and provide job opportunities for their residents—and they need our help!

Mr. Speaker, the bill I introduce today will provide local leaders some of the resources they need to fight this battle—at no cost to the U.S. Treasury. The Rural Credit and Development Act of 1994 would leverage the $65 billion in assets of the cooperative Farm Credit System for the benefit of rural communities who are in desperate need of capital. This legislation will allow Farm Credit's far-flung network of lending offices to play a crucial role in providing the dollars needed to rebuild rural economies.

The Farm Credit System offers 250 financial institutions and over 1,400 lending offices nationwide, all controlled and owned by people who live and work in rural areas. These local Farm Credit leaders as committed to meeting the changing needs of agriculture and rural business. Consequently, the Rural Credit and Development Act of 1994 would employ this established delivery network to bring the resources of Wall Street to rural businesses, rural infrastructure, rural housing stock, and much needed rural community facilities.

Today, our Nation's rural communities have a tremendous potential opportunity to help expand the national economy and spur economic growth. Rural America possesses a record of substantial economic achievement and a workforce willing to meet the challenges of the next century. This legislation can help rural America realize its potential by providing it with the necessary capital for job creation and economic diversification.

For over 75 years, the Farm Credit System has successfully put the financial resources of urban centers to work for American agriculture. I ask my colleagues to provide this same opportunity for the rest of rural America by signing on as cosponsors to this legislation and working for its swift passage. Thank you.

ASSASSINATION OF LUIS DONALD COLOSIO

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAUGHLIN). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, it was said most eloquently in a report on one of the network newscasts this evening, when an elderly woman, drying, walked through the streets of Tijuana and said, "This is very painful."

I rise to note with great sadness the assassination of Luis Donald Colosio, the leading presidential candidate in Mexico. As with any killing, this is first and foremost a personal tragedy. He was a young man, 44 years of age, when he was killed.

He leaves behind a wife and 2 young children, a 7-year-old son and a newborn daughter.

As President Clinton noted earlier, his discussion of this tragedy with President Salinas was entirely regarding the personal nature of this loss.

I had the pleasure of meeting and working with Mr. Colosio, as have a number of our colleagues, on many different occasions. He was a fine man, well-educated, intelligent and incredibly dedicated to making Mexico a better place.

He rose from poverty, earned scholarships through hard work that led to degrees in economics from the Monterrey Institute of Technology and the University of Pennsylvania.

He dedicated his political career to bringing the fruits of free market economic growth to all the Mexican people, especially the poor. And it should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that when he was assassinated yesterday, he was campaigning in a very poor neighborhood in the outskirts of Tijuana.

Mr. Colosio was dedicated to building upon the remarkable economic success story of the Salinas administration in Mexico. By moving away from socialism and protectionism to competition and freer markets, Mexico has made great economic progress. Mexico today stands as one of the world's fastest growing economies.

As the Secretary of Social Development, Colosio was the director of grassroots infrastructure and social welfare projects that were designed to bring the benefits of economic development to all of Mexico.

He was also at the very head of the Mexican effort to expend greater resources on environmental improvements. These programs earned him widespread respect and support from the Mexican people. And I will never forget when President Salinas told me that the overwhelming number of letters that came to him on a daily basis have come from young children talking about environmental concerns. And these were the things that Mr. Colosio was working.

However, as in all developing countries, there is much to be done. As a presidential candidate, Secretary Colosio promised to focus even more of the benefits on market reforms for the poor. He was undoubtedly a threat to those on the left who hoped to use the lack of immediate prosperity throughout Mexico as the wedge to turn Mexico away from market reforms.

Mr. Speaker, the Colosio assassination is first and foremost a personal tragedy for his family and friends. However, it also has dark implications regarding the NAFTA political battle that was undertaken last year right here in the United States Congress. Earlier today, I was deeply disappointed when one of our colleagues, one of the leading opponents of the North American Free Trade Agreement essentially blamed the NAFTA for the killing of Mr. Colosio.

In the remarks she excused the inexcusable murder of a political figure by claiming that the assassin was pushed into this brutal act by the Trade Agreement. It is this type of faceless vitriolic anti-Mexican rhetoric that has contributed to a new level of violence in Mexico.

The life and death anti-Mexico rhetoric surrounding NATFA was uncalled for. NAFTA is nothing more than a trade agreement that phases out tariffs and establishes rules for investment. It will not change the world or serve as a panacea for problems in any country. However, it is also not the economic or political disaster described by those who demonized the agreement all of last year.

How soon we forget that in the battle to stop free trade, NAFTA opponents used such inflamed rhetoric that NAFTA was portrayed as a life or death struggle. Members of Congress here had their lives threatened, literally threatened with death if they voted for the NAFTA. We can only consider ourselves lucky that the level of anxiety and anger over NAFTA quickly dissipated when the bill was passed and the agreement was implemented. That is because all of the sucking-sound rhetoric was so obviously wrong.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the very same political rhetoric appears to have bred life-and-death consequences in Mexico. We thought that the rebels in Chiapas, who took up arms against the Mexican government, blamed NAFTA, an agreement that had nothing to do with any of their grievances, proved nothing more than that they had good media consultant.

Now a responsible Member of Congress blames the killing of a foreign political figure on the enactment of the trade agreement. Our rhetoric has gone too far.

Mr. Speaker, the murder of Luis Colosio is a dark moment, a horrible victory of violence over deliberation, the gun over the ballot box and hatred over reconciliation.

And I would like to add that late this afternoon I met in my office with former Ambassador John Gavin who joins me in extending his condolences to the Mexican people. Ambassador Gavin is convinced that the solidarity for which Mr. Colosio stood will continue to grow.

The Mexican people will move on. The American people should hope that they continue on the path to freedom, democracy and open markets that Luis Donaldo Colosio advocated. Over time, the prosperity that those forces will bring will bring the rewards that every Mexican and every American deserves.

THE CLINTON YEARS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, about 35 Republicans were jammed in the Cloakroom tonight watching Mr. Clinton's short press conference. It was even shorter if you count only the time that he spoke. I do not think it solved many things, but two things come to mind.

One was, he referred to himself and Mrs. Clinton as middle-class folks or something like that. Pulling down over $200,000 a year between them hardly qualifies them for middle-class status, particularly in the second poorest State in the Union. In fact, they would be considered the very rich under his tax plan.

I wanted to put into the RECORD an article by Lisa Shiffren that appeared in the American Spectator a couple of months ago which exposes the various funds that then-Governor Clinton was allowed to tap and which allowed him to have a very comfortable life. These funds were out of the control of the Arkansas Legislature. I think I will just submit the front page so we do not get into any of these cost problems.

Mr. Speaker, when Mr. LEACH, my colleague from Iowa and my classmate from 1976, spoke on a point of personal privilege on the floor tonight, I think his last sentence will ring through history. I know he is going to add more to this and asked permission to do that at the end of business today.

His last words were, "Rather than high crimes and misdemeanors, the issue today relates to high improprieties and breaches of the public trust."

Well, that is for openers. I hope people will treasure the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of today, because in it will be Mr. LEACH's 20-page statement that he has permission to augment.

Mr. Speaker, this whole Whitewater controversy is sinking into the popular culture.

□ 2130

The opening of the last two very popular youth culture shows, Saturday Night Live, began with Whitewater. I have in front of me the text from the night of March 12. It is so rough I cannot even put it in the RECORD.

I think it was payback time for comedian actor Phil Hartman, because the White House had blocked him from entertaining the Queen of England at a command performance. They did not want him doing a parody of the President of the United States. Can you imagine, if Mr. Reagan or Mr. Bush had ever shut down an actor in England?

I will put in the RECORD the transcript of a song that opened Saturday Night Live on 19 March. It is stunning to think that young people are going to get their education on Whitewater more clearly from comedians on a popular NBC comedy show than they will from the President himself.

Mr. Speaker, the President was on ABC television last night and the night before talking about his particular brand of Christianity. He was asked by Peggy Wiemeyer, of ABC, about abortion.

He said, "I think there are too many abortions in America," and yet his policies are driving that number up. He said, "I think there should be more adoption in America." There are only 50,000, and we know why. Then he says, "I do not believe it is self-evident from the Bible that abortion is murder."

"As for homosexuality, well, the whole issue of homosexuality did not make it into the Ten Commandments."

Look up there, Mr. Speaker. Look at Moses looking down at you and this Chamber. Did Mosaic law have to identify grand theft auto and pick-pocketing for us to know it is wrong?

What Mr. Clinton ought to know is that any religion that respects Mosaic law and the commandment, "Thou shall not commit adultery," considers homosexuality and acts of sex outside of marriage sin.

Here is Clinton February 3, after he was lectured to by Mother Teresa who begged him not to kill babies, to give them to her. He was at a junior high school here in the District. In response to a child's question, he says that "Children are not prepared to take the responsibility for children, having children. They are not even able to take responsibility for themselves. This is not a sport," referring to sex, "this is a solemn responsibility. Look at it hard." Great words, but I understand some of the kids chuckled.

That night on NBC Jay Leno said, "If sex were a sport, Michael Jackson and Mr. Clinton would obviously be up for gold medals."

Mr. Speaker, but as bad as that is, Joycelyn Elders is probably going to do more as Surgeon General to hurt the moral climate of our country than any other appointment of Mr. Clinton's, and that is saying a mouthful. I begin by urging everyone to look at the letter by James Cardinal Hickey that I submitted during my one minute this morning on the latest outrage by Dr. Elders.

Here is an article from the Wanderer, by a lady, Anne Stewart Connell, that describes accurately how Dr. Elders actually have a slave-master mentality. In her speech on February 25 to the Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association, all a euphemism for abortion, she blasted the medicaid system for its white male slave-owner mentality. But Connell rightly points out, "She has it all wrong. It is she who demonstrated slave-owner mentality in her arrogant and sarcastic words and actions."

Mr. Speaker, I will include this article for the RECORD. It may move people to subscribe to The Wanderer, which I think is the clearest-thinking Christian publication today.

The final thing I would like to put in is the latest press release from the General Counsel of the Plaintiffs, the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, and the American Council for Health Care Reform, and the National Legal and Policy Center.

Today they filed a motion for summary judgment and permanent injunction against, get this mouthful, Mr. Speaker, the Interdepartmental Working Group of the President's Task Force on National Health Care and its 15 cluster groups, 43 working groups, and 4 subgroups. They are taking on Ira Magaziner, another Rhodie who actually got his degree, whereas Clinton did not, who is running this health care task force with Mrs. Clinton. The AAPS said that he testified under oath that those 511 people that were on that Health Care Council, that long mouthful I just said, were composed entirely of Federal Government employees.

Not true, not by a long shot. It looks like there is a huge conflict of interest here, and the judges on this case are going to eventually demand the release of all of these documents. I think the press conferences to come in the future are going to be more and more fascinating. I fear a Presidential meltdown, I had great respect for Jimmy Carter and enjoyed every invitation to the White House, and went there about 7 to 10 times when he was President. I look forward to going there to visit with the 43rd presidency, a former colleague and a great guy, AL GORE.

(Articles referred to follow:)

On March 23, 1994, the Plaintiffs, *Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, *American Council for Health Care Reform and the *National Legal & Policy Center: filed a "Motion for Summary Judgment and Permanent Injunction" asking that the *Interdepartmental Working Group of the President's Task Force on National Health Care Reform and its 15 Cluster Groups, 43 Working Groups and 4 Subgroups be declared Advisory Committees for purposes of the Federal Advisory Committee Act on the grounds that the *Interdepartmental Working Group and its Cluster Groups, Working Groups and Subgroups were not composed "wholly of full-time officers or employers of the federal government" and that they were established on January 25, 1993 by the President and utilized by him for purposes of developing and making recommendations on national health care reform, to wit, the *Health Security Act of 1993. The injunction would force the disclosure of all records of the Task Force and its Cluster Groups, Working Groups and Subgroups.

Accompanying the "Motion for Summary Judgment and Permanent Injunction" were nearly 2,000 documents produced by the White House which reveal startling information. The documents illustrate that *Ira Magaziner's Interdeparmental Working Group and all 15 Cluster Groups, 43 Working Groups and 4 Subgroups were not, as Magaziner testified under oath, composed entirely of federal government employees, but, rather, consisted, in every instance, of large numbers of persons with vested private interests who have the world to gain by the enactment of the Health Security Act of 1993, which they developed and recommended. In over half of the Cluster Groups, Working Groups and Subgroups, the leaders were private individuals from health care interests who would be key players in the Clinton Plan if enacted.

Private interests such as United Health Care Corporation, Chicago Health Maintenance Organization, Aetna, Travelers, Liberty Mutual Insurance, Wausau Insurance Company, National Capitol Preferred Providers Organization (Hartford Insurance Company), Harvard Community Health Plan, Kaiser Permanente, U.S. Health Care, EDS Health Care, PCS Health Systems, First Health, Blue Cross Blue Shield Association, Alliant Health Systems—all managed care companies—were represented in the Interdepartmental Working Group. Other potential contractors such as Rand Corporation, Alpha Center, Urban Institute, Telesis, MCI Communication, Coopers & Lybrand, Price Waterhouse and the Principal Financial Group served on the Task Force. The list of special interests—all seeking special roles in the proposed health care plan as contractors, alliances, administrators and medical auditors—is enormous.

Moreover, of the many members of the Interdepartmental Working Group and its Cluster Groups, Working Groups and Subgroups who were listed as "special government employees" by the White House, only a small number (35) filed conflict of interest forms and of those, many of the forms were filed late and others were backdated and possibly forged. Of those special government employees who had serious conflicts of interest—and there were a sizable number—none had complied with the Ethics in Government Act by obtaining waivers. Of significant importance is that even the President and the First Lady, prior to the time their assets were placed in a blind trust, had invested in at least one managed care company—United Health Care Corporation—whose vice president served on the Interdepartmental Working Group and many Cluster Groups, Working Groups and Subgroups.

Probably the most serious problem raised by the Task Force and its Interdepartmental Working Groups and its Cluster Groups, Working Groups and Subgroups is the role of multi-billion dollar tax exempt foundations who were instrumental in staffing and decision-making. The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, with $4 billion in assets, along with the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation and the Urban Institute planned and staffed much of the Task Force. As they have done in many states such as Arkansas, Washington, Kentucky, Minnesota and Florida, these large, tax-exempt foundations developed the format for the Task Force structure and asked their own people, including many grant recipients, to sit on the Task Force and develop the Clinton Managed Care Plan.

In addition, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation had paid "Fellows" sitting on the staffs of Sens. Kennedy, Rockefeller, Wofford, Bumpers and Bradley who were passed off to the Court by the White House as "Congressional Staff", but who were wholly privately paid by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Ira Magaziner, of course, knew who these people were as did Judith Feder, an official in the Department of Health and Human Services, who was also on the Task Force and who, herself, is a Robert Wood Johnson grant investigator.

The insinuation of these multibillion dollar, private, tax-exempt foundations into the legislative and executive branches of government, behind closed doors, in order to make policy and legislation to benefit themselves and those they seek to promote is frightening in the extreme.

Clearly, the Interdepartmental Working Group of the President's Task Force on National Health Care Reform is not only fraught with conflict-of-interest problems, but represents an effort to utterly co-opt representative government.

DR. ELDERS: SLAVE-MASTER MENTALITY

(By Anne Stewart Connell)

The surgeon general, Dr. Joycelyn Elders, in a speech to the annual meeting of the National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association on Feb. 25th, blasted the Medicaid system for its "white male slave owner mentality." Elders has it all wrong. It is she who demonstrated slave owner mentality in her arrogant and sarcastic words and actions.

Elders castigated "white male slave owner" Medicaid because "it fails to provide services to poor women to prevent unwanted pregnancies, and this failure contributes to poverty, ignorance, and enslavement." She complained that if we really want to do something about illegitimate births and unwanted births, Medicaid should support family planning at the same level as prenatal care. * * * The Medicaid system must have been developed by a male slave owner. It pays for you to be pregnant and have a baby, but it won't pay for much family planning."

What does slave master Elders mean by this? It's a known fact that anybody who qualifies as being poor can get birth control counseling and supplies from Planned Parenthood for next to nothing. And when Elders was director of the Arkansas Health Department, she attacked the "deadly disease" of teenage pregnancy by establishing school-based clinics that provided "counseling" and contraceptives to teenagers. Result? Under Elders' tenure, the overall teen pregnancy rate rose 12% in the counties with school-based clinics! What the power-driven social engineers in Planned Parenthood and the Clinton administration simply don't "get" is that trying to impose their antilife values on women, young or not young, is rejected as slave-master whipping.

Elders also stated at this meeting, "We always talked about the separation of church and state, I want to forget about the separation. Let's try to integrate church and state so we can come together and begin to do things that make a difference to people in our community." That's a very interesting slave-master comment. What she is really saying is that she wants churches to preach her antilife gospel; support her immoral sanctions of abortion and contraception; and declare her to be the "pope of infertility."

This bigoted woman whom Clinton elevated to the position of surgeon general was exposed in The Wall Street Journal on July 22nd by Blant Hurt's commentary. Hurt, a Little Rock businessman and a columnist for Arkansas Business, spoke from firsthand experience. Elders triple-dipped salaries. in addition to her "two state salaries adding up to $103,297, she was receiving $550 a day as a consultant to Donna Shalala, secretary of Health and Human Services!"

A person with the sleazy record of Dr. Elders is hardly in a position to preach. But preach she does, and now she asks the churches to sanction her slave-master beliefs and attitudes. A message is in need of deliverance to Dr. Elders: Just because you are black and a woman does not relieve you of the judgment that you have a slave-master mentality. You do, Dr. Elders, and it is totally unacceptable.

BILL AND HILLARY AT THE TROUGH

Ever wonder why President Bill and First Lady Hillary seem so genuinely to believe that all money earned in the 1980s was somehow illegitimate and undeserved? Or why, after a decade-long national experiment, they seem completely indifferent to the effects of tax rates on people's willingness to work? Or to the relation between incentives and productivity in general? Or, most dismaying, why they seem not to believe that most people who do well work very hard for their money?

When Bill Clinton nominated Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court, he said: "I believe the measure of a person's values can best be measured by examining the life the person lives." In that spirit, Bill and Hillary's financial life, as reflected in a decade's worth of tax returns, sheds light on their values, and the experience that shaped their economic worldviews.

SUBSIDIES FOR PERSONAL EXPENSES

Remember Bill Clinton's much-touted "lowest-in-the-nation" $35,000 governor's salary? That was merely his cash compensation—mad money. For the decade he was governor, all Clinton's personal living expenses (including food, shelter, transportation, and entertainment), along with security, housekeeping, administration, utilities, etc., were paid out of various state funds. Including those expenses, the care and feeding of their humble governor cost taxpayers in the nation's second-poorest state more than three-quarters of a million dollars a year according to the Arkansas state auditor, Julia Hughes Jones. And it left Hillary's annual $150,000 or so free.

Two particular funds raise interesting legal questions. One was a yearly $51,000 food allotment, intended for both state functions and private meals, as well as incidental mansion expenses and anything else the governor might wish to spend it on. Unlike most expense funds, but like income, that stipend was not subject to oversight by the state legislature. (According to a former senior official in the Tax Division of the U.S. Department of Justice, "One rule of thumb used to determine what is income is unrestricted discretion,") While governor, America's First Appetite annoyed the legislature by requesting a significantly larger "food allowance" during a late-1980s period of belt-tightening. According to former IRS Commissioner Donald Alexander, who has reviewed the returns, the $51,000 fund "probably constitutes a failure to report income."

ROCKERS TO EXPLAIN WHITEWATER ON SATURDAY NIGHT LIVE

Back in 1978, the Clinton's bought some land to sell vacation homes. 230 acres to be exact.

They borrowed $203 thousand with their friends the MacDougals and formed the Whitewater Development Corporation. That's a fact.

In 1980 MacDougal buys the Madison Bank and Trust.

He lends his partner Hillary 30 grand to build a model house on a Whitewater lot. He loans her the money to get around laws which prevent him from loaning money to himself or his own company.

That's the plot.

It's very complicated. It's hard to understand.

We'll try to walk you through it, come on and take my hand.

In 1984 Whitewater helps Bill pay back a $20 thousand personal loan to Cherry Valley Bank, and the Clintons claim the payment as an interest deduction on their tax return.

That's an illegal deduction, but the Clinton's blame their accountants for the mistake.

This is an intriguing turn.

MacDougal pays back Clinton's loan and hires Hillary and her law firm to represent his bank. Then she helps Whitewater buy a new place of land with an illegal $300 thousand loan.

MacDougal says he shipped the Clinton's all the files to the Governor's Mansion and the Clinton's say they never got them. These guys should talk on the phone.

It's very tough to figure, where it all went wrong.

But draw your own conclusions, from listening to our song.

Madison Bank goes under, with $60 million missing. MacDougal is arrested and in a conflict of interest, Hillary's law firm is hired for a suit against the bank that it used to represent.

MacDougal is acquitted, but claims the Clinton's lost much less than the $68 thousand they claim.

In 1992 Clinton ran for President.

It's really quite a puzzle, who did what to who.

But we gotta get a handle, it's up to me and you.

In 1993 Vince Foster, the Clinton's friend and attorney who worked at the same firm as Hillary, filed long overdue taxes for Whitewater which contradicted most of the established financial numbers.

After his suicide, important papers were removed from his office. White House staffers met with the Treasury Department and then Janet Reno named a special prosecutor and the House began deciding whether to hold hearings and what kind to hold.

So finally the President had to bring Lloyd Cutler, an old Democratic hand, to restore some order to his administration.

We don't have all the answers, perhaps we never will. The only ones who'll ever know are Hillary and Bill and MacDougal and his wife and Webster Hubbell and Margaret Williams and Vince Foster.

COWARDICE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STRICKLAND] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, before I came to this Chamber I was a psychologist, and so I am a student of human behavior. One of the things I have observed since I have been a Member of this body is that there is much what I would term cowardly behavior displayed in this Chamber at times.

We have people in this Chamber who hide behind the rules of this House. The rules of this House enable those of us who are Members to speak about other people, other individuals, our President, in the most callous, crass, and unkind manner. We know that we can hide behind the rules of this House because it is impossible to be identified by name, and to be censured by name by other Members of this body.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I sat in my office and I observed a Member of this body make a statement about Vincent Foster and his suicide, saying in effect that Mr. Foster committed suicide because he was too cowardly and did not have the guts to face the coming firestorm.

Mr. Speaker, I was appalled by that kind of statement, because it takes a coward, Mr. Speaker, to pick on the dead.

UPCOMING LEGISLATION AND SUGGESTIONS FOR REDUCING THE DEFICIT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, we are about to go home for a work recess. There are a lot of issues that Congress is dealing with, some that we have not addressed that I look forward to addressing when we get back, some of the environmental issues, the defense issues, GATT, private property rights issues, reapportionment.

Reapportionment, right now there are many Southern States that are under the Voting Rights Act, that have lawsuits that have been filed or that are being appealed, and that at this point appears to be something a little bit more unique to the Southern States that are subject to the Voting Rights Act.

Mr. Speaker, I believe when we get back that is going to spread all over the country, and it will probably be proper for Congress to address the issue about minority voting representation, because I was a member of the State legislature at the time when Georgia drew our lines, and I know at the time we worked under Justice Department guidelines.

Now I understand that there are many people who believe that those guidelines were not poured in concrete, as we were led to believe. The lawsuits are indicating this. I think it is going to be something we will need to address.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to talk about tonight, the centerpiece of all legislation is the cost, so I want to talk about the budget.

As Members know, our national debt right now is $4.5 trillion. It is a bipartisan problem. During the period of time this debt was amassed there were certainly Democrats and Republicans on both sides of the aisle who participated in deficit spending, so let us put aside the partisanship.

There are a lot of ways we can attack the budget. I will outline five of them that I think will help.

Number one, Vice President GORE'S Reinventing Government. At one time we thought and hoped that would save about $9 billion. Later it was scored a little less than that. Whether it is more than $9 billion or less, let us get behind the Vice President and try to reinvent government and save the taxpayer's dollars.

A second way I believe we can save money to decrease our deficit is to reform welfare. Reforming welfare should not only save money and reduce the costs of our entitlement programs for public benefits, but it will also bring in more revenue, because ultimately we will have more people on the tax rolls. I think that is very important.

We should have two major components in welfare: one is a work component, where people who are able to work are required to work, a carrot and a stick.

At the same time, let use not push a woman out the door and not help her out with her day care problem for her children. Let us not push her out the door into the work world and expect her to give up those insurance benefits. Let us be practical about it.

I think we can work out the compromise so that those who are on welfare can have a smooth transition into total independence.

The second part is we have to bring the dad back into the formula. We have a welfare system that lets fathers act like tomcats. They can go and basically impregnate a woman, and they are on their way, no more responsibility according to the government than a tomcat. And I think it is time to let the father get back into the formula. I believe there is a rent reform bill right now that will help this, which says if the dad lives at home and his income increases the family's total income, where they would ordinarily not be eligible to live in the housing project anymore, this would be waived so that he could still live there.

It is so important to bring these family units back together. Let us help the folks by reuniting their family. I think these components should be in there.

A third item we should address in a very serious manner to help bring down our deficit is that of illegal immigration. The cost to our Nation is about $14 billion a year, and many people are coming to our country because of the public assistance benefits. But not only is that costing us, but there is a big cost in our Federal penal system, and that is that about 22 percent of our prisoners are illegal immigrants, and these are, in many cases, I think 80 percent of the time, violent offenders. That is a tremendous cost for us. Let us as a Congress address this problem for deficit reduction if for no other reason.

The fourth thing we can do to reduce the debt or the deficit is to address criminal justice. The average career criminal each year commits about $500,000 worth of property and damage and theft. And yet the price of incarceration is only about $20,000 a year. I do not like incarceration, but it isolates folks from society, and it is ultimately less expensive for society.

I have a letter on my desk from a woman whose daughter was raped while bathing her child. She was at home and a man broke into her home, threatened to kill the baby if the woman did not cooperate, and being a loving mother she did what she felt was necessary for the survival of her child. But now that rapist is about to get out of jail, and it just horrifies her, and it horrifies all of her relatives and the children. We cannot live in a society where people are living in such fear. We need to keep folks behind bars who have committed such crimes.

The fifth thing I believe we can do to bring down the deficit, Mr. Speaker, is to help the American family out. In the 1950s the American family paid as an average for income tax 2 percent. Today that same family is paying Federal income tax of 24 percent. We cannot do that to the family, Mr. Speaker, because during that period of time, in order to pay for higher taxes, the family had to work harder. As a result, the family is spending less time with each other, the family members and with the children, and less time to impart information, impart values, impart the difference between right and wrong, education, homework, a myriad of other things.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe when we get back if we reinvent government, welfare, illegal immigration, crime, and help the family, that we will help reduce the deficit and then pay down the debt.

SUBSIDY REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAUGHLIN). under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS] is recognized for 60 minutes as the majority leader's designee.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, we have just concluded a very important Phase 1 of this year of the 103rd session of Congress. In conclusion, we passed H.R. 6, the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Assistance Act. I think to close out this phase of this year's session with passage of a major education bill was very much in order.

There are discussions under way now in the White House, and a few other places, about welfare reform and the relationship is an obvious one. Education is a vital necessity if we are going to have meaningful welfare reform. Education, job training and actual creation of jobs, those three are very necessary if we are going to have meaningful welfare reform.

I rise in favor of welfare reform. I am in favor of any form of reform of a Federal function or government function. Everything can be improved. But I hope the reform will go forward without hysteria, and without seeking to wreak revenge upon the poor. Welfare reform ought to be guided by scientific principles, by logic, by sound management principles. I think we can accomplish a great deal.

I rise to advocate welfare reform with principles that really should apply to all American citizens who receive assistance from our government. If we are going to establish certain principles with respect to welfare, then let it be across the board for all citizens who receive assistance from government.

From time to time, different classes of citizens need assistance. We just passed not too long ago a bill which appropriated more than $8 billion for earthquake relief for victims of the earthquake in California. And it is totally appropriate that government should come to the aid of people in need. In this case, victims of the earthquake, regardless of income level, regardless of education, will be recipients of that earthquake relief.

Last year we appropriated $6 billion, more than $6 billion for relief for victims of the Midwest floods, more than $6 billion. They were victims. They needed assistance of their government. It is altogether appropriate and fitting and proper that our government should come to the aid of those who need assistance.

The year before that, we had appropriated I think more than $6 billion for hurricane relief for victims of the hurricane in Florida. People who were victims of hurricanes needed the government to come to their assistance. It is fitting and proper that we should do that. Wherever American are in need, then they should be assisted.

Members must understand however, that in our big cities we have a form of disaster which is not a natural disaster or a God-made disaster, but it is nevertheless a disaster. Certain of our inner city communities have had unemployment levels 10 points higher than national unemployment levels for the last 10 years. There are areas in my congressional district where unemployment has been up as high as 20 percent for a long period of time for adults, and for young adults even higher than that. And this is not unique to my district in New York. There are similar districts in the big cities, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, you name it, where the same kind of "job quake," you might say, unemployment quake has existed. So those victims need relief, too.

Relief to these victims, these families, often comes in the form of Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Welfare reform should be looked upon as providing help to those victims who are in need. But as we look at welfare reform, I think the parameters ought to be broadened, and if we are going to have reform of welfare which is directed primarily to Aid to Families with Dependent Children, we ought to take a look at other forms of welfare also and at the same time.

Maybe we should not even call the actions we are about to take, or the plans that are about to be put forth welfare reform at all. We should call it subsidy reform or victim assistance reform. Some people are receiving subsidies who are not victims, so we should call it subsidy reform.

If we call it subsidy reform, then we will reach out and take a hard look at everybody who is getting assistance from the government, and take a look at what should be done about that and what principles should be applied. I think this would be far more in line with the notion that we are a just and fair society and want to be fair to everybody. We do not want to just take revenge against the poor.

People get very excited about the thought of these poor people sitting around doing nothing, no work, and therefore they are on welfare and using taxpayers' money. I think we should try to find jobs for everybody we can find jobs for. I think victims should be assisted when they cannot find jobs. But I am all in favor of jobs as a sound principle in welfare reform. Providing jobs for all, providing jobs for people on welfare, that is a sound principle, and every discussion of welfare that I have heard so far has talked about we are going to provide jobs. Two years on welfare and then you get a job.

I have no problem with providing jobs. Jobs are basic to our society. There is plenty of work, you know; there are many, many things to be done in our society. But work is not a job. A job is something you get paid for. Employment is something you get paid for.

Therefore, if they cannot find jobs in the private sector, I think our Government should create meaningful jobs or should provide economic policies which generate meaningful jobs so that everybody, every sound-bodied person, can get a job.

I am all in favor of that. In fact, since I arrived in Congress, every year I have introduced, and the first year I introduced it, and every session I have reintroduced a bill which calls for a revision of the Constitution to add an amendment which would provide for a job opportunity for every American who wants to work.

I think that this would not be radical idea at all, to provide a job opportunity for every American who wants to work, and when there are no jobs, it should be the duty of the Congress to create programs that generate jobs.

So as we talk about welfare reform, the idea, the principle, of jobs is a sound principle that I support.

Now, the principle of 2 years and you are off, if you are on welfare, 2 years you are getting assistance, for 2 years, 2 years and no more, that principle is something maybe we should take a look at. It might be a sound principle. It might not be. I think Congress ought to examine the principle of 2 years and you are off. Or maybe we want to look at 3 years and you are off, or maybe 4 years and you are off, but I think we ought to examine the principle, and if we are going to examine the principle of 2 years and you are off, we ought to think in terms of all people who are receiving subsidies from the Government.

Can they also accept the same principle? Do we want to establish in our Government a principle that the government should assist individuals or families or groups for 2 years and no more? Do we want to establish that principle? Or maybe it should be 4 years or 3 years.

Whatever the principle is, let us have it apply across the board to all Government subsidies. That means farm subsidies where you are giving farmers money in order to control the kind, the amount of crops we produce, and keep the prices at a certain level. The taxpayers pay twice. They pay to subsidize the farmers, and they pay for higher food prices, because by regulating the price, by paying to keep the grain and the products off the market, we keep the price high, so you pay twice. You pay a higher cost for food as a result of this Government-controlled regulated situation through the farm subsidy program.

We have had some farm subsidy programs for three decades, three decades, not 2 years, three decades. If you are going to apply the principle of 2 years and you are off, 2 years of assistance from our Government and no more, then we should get rid of the farm subsidy programs in 2 years.

Of course, that would generate quite a bit of money, you know; the budget would save quite a bit of money which maybe can be used for the welfare reform program to provide for more jobs that are created in inner cities, cleaning up the environment, doing all the work that needs to be done, and also provide day care for mothers who have to go to work. There are a number of ways you could use the money you save by cutting off the farm subsidies, because they have been on for three decades, and 2 years is all we are going to tolerate, 2 years of raising your cattle on publicly owned land by all of those cattle grazers out there who have raised their cattle on publicly owned lands at discount rates, discount rates which are much lower than private property owners are charging, 2 years, and then we charge full rates.

We would gain quite a bit of revenue from charging full rates after we have helped the farmers, and these farmers are not poor. These ranchers are not poor. Some of them are multimillionaires. Two years, and that is it.

Two years of low-interest mortgages on the Farmers' Home Loan Mortgage Program, 2 years with low interest, and then you pay the regular interest rate.

You would save quite a bit of money on the Farmers Home Loan Mortgage Program if you stopped giving away money. People get incensed. Taxpayers, listen, people get very incensed when they see welfare recipients getting $400 a month for a family of four. But do you know that the Farmers Home Loan Mortgage Program gave $11.5 billion to farmers over the last 5 years? These are loans that the farmers had that they forgave over the last 5 years for $11.5 billion. Not only did they not put them off after 2 years, when they decided to put them off, they just let them take the money and run.

So this is just an introduction to a discussion I want to have in concert with my colleagues. We are all concerned about the forward movement of the preparation for the welfare reform bill, and I think we should open by asking all the taxpayers to have an open mind. We are in favor of reform of any function, any program in the Government that has existed for some time that can benefit from reform.

But let us go forward with some sound principles, sound management principles, sound principles of logic, scientific principles and let us not be afraid to compare what we are doing with welfare, meaning aid to families with dependent children, and what we are doing in assisting Americans in other walks of life.

Let us have the broadest possible approach to this situation.

At this point I yield to two of my colleagues to also make the same kind of introduction of this problem that we have been discussing in Congress for a long time.

I think as we close out this phase of Congress and go on recess and return, welfare reform, I think, will be very much on the agenda and moving forward. It is time for us now to stop and take stock and prepare for a long, long debate on welfare reform.

At this point, I yield to my colleague, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WOOLSEY].

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Representative MINK and Representative OWENS for organizing this special order on welfare reform today, and I look forward to participating in an ongoing dialogue and discussion about the essential elements of welfare reform, especially with an emphasis on how reform will affect women and their children.

I have often said that, in order to have effective welfare reform, other social support services must be in place both to prevent the need to go on welfare in the first place, and to help recipients get off and stay off for good. Those services include health care, child care, transportation, jobs that pay a family wage, and child support enforcement.

Today, I would like to focus on our Nation's child support system and how important the quality of child support enforcement is to truly effective welfare reform. The simple fact is that we cannot have true welfare reform without dramatically improving our child support system.

Mr. Speaker, of the $47 billion owed in child support each year, only $13 billion is collected, leaving a $34 billion gap between what is owed, and what is paid, to support our children. That $34 billion gap is a national disgrace, which is punishing our children and bankrupting our welfare system.

I have introduced legislation to fundamentally change the child support collection system in the United States. This bill, called the Secure Assurance for Families Everywhere Act, or SAFE, will dramatically increase child support collection.

First, SAFE will federalize child support collection by having the IRS maintain a national registry of child support orders, and using wage withholding to collect support.

Second, this bill guarantees every family, that is owed child support, a minimum monthly payment.

Third, it will dramatically increase paternity establishment.

Today, States use Federal dollars to collect child support—resulting in confusion, duplication, and abysmal collection rates, which range as low as 11.9 percent. Further, 33 percent of child support cases are interstate. Since it is difficult for States to enforce child support collection across State lines, less than $1 for every $10, owed in interstate child support, is collected.

The SAFE Act would do away with the current hit-or-miss State child support collection system. My bill enables the IRS, which has an 84 percent collection rate, to withhold child support payments from an absent parent's paycheck and pay support to families with child support orders.

Just like the Social Security System, which ensures that children of deceased parents receive financial support, the SAFE Act guarantees that children abandoned by their living parents are ALSO supported. My legislation will provide every parent who is owed child support a minimum monthly payment of $250.

In order for this program to be truly effective, however, we need to make progress on establishing paternity. The SAFE Act will make it easier to establish paternity and to meet parental responsibilities.

Child Support Reform, after all, is about taking care of our children.

I personally know the importance of child support, Mr. Speaker, because 25 years ago, I was a divorced, working mother struggling to raise my three small children ages 1, 3, and 5. I had been living a "Leave it to Beaver" life—successful husband; beautiful home; healthy kids—and suddenly, through no fault of my own or my children's, I was left alone with no child support to raise my family. Although, I was working, I was forced to go on AFDC in order to take care of my family's needs.

Mr. Speaker, if the United States had had a child support system in 1968 like the one I am proposing today, I might not have needed to go on welfare in the first place.

With children accounting for 70 percent of welfare recipients, this bill will play a major role in reducing dependence on welfare, and, it should be the first step Congress takes, if we are truly serious about reforming the welfare system.

Researchers, such as Dr. Irwin Garfinkel, estimate that a system like the SAFE Act could move about one-third of welfare recipients off the system.

The SAFE Act could have made a real difference in my life and my children's. Now, with this legislation, I have the opportunity to make sure that all of our Nation's children are given the care and support they need.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleagues in the other body, Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator DODD, for joining me in calling for child support reform to be an integral part of the welfare reform debate. And, I look forward to working with my colleagues in this body for fair and effective welfare reform.

I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my distinguished colleague from California for that fine piece of legislation, and I would like to become a cosponsor. I think it certainly ought to be a component of any welfare reform legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions which I would like to ask. When the gentlewoman said $250, did she mean $250 per child or per family?

Ms. WOOLSEY. $250, Mr. OWENS, for the first child and $300 a month for more than one child.

Mr. OWENS. Is it comparable to what AFDC paid?

Ms. WOOLSEY. It is more.

Mr. OWENS. It is more?

Ms. WOOLSEY. Aid for Dependent Children can be part of this. If there is not enough, Aid to Dependent Children comes in and add to the support.

Mr. OWENS. Is it comparable to what Social Security pays for survivors?

Ms. WOOLSEY. Almost; not quite.

Mr. OWENS. I thank the gentlewoman and look forward to working with her in making sure that this legislation is part of any reform legislation.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I would like to expand just a bit on why I think that $250, even though it is not very much money, it is enough. When people are poor, if they cannot count on the money coming in, they cannot budget. But if they know what is coming in, they can budget a lot better than a hit-and-miss proposition; sometimes the money comes in and sometimes it does not.

That is why I am going to try very hard to have income assurance, which is a new concept in this Nation.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, would the gentlewoman also agree that collecting from fathers who are not in the home, who do not have jobs, is almost an impossibility and so a jobs program is an absolute necessity for a large percentage of the fathers involved here?

Ms. WOOLSEY. Absolutely. I do not think we can have welfare reform unless we have jobs in this Nation which pay a family wage and which train and educate people for those jobs, unless we have true health care reform, and then we can talk about welfare reform.

Mr. OWENS. I thank the gentlewoman from California and yield to my colleague, the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK].

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. I thank my colleague for yielding and for taking this special order.

As indicated in the opening of this hour, these past weeks have been an extremely important and demanding period of our time. All three of us share responsibility in the Committee on Education and Labor, and we have concluded a conference on Goals 2000, with some difficulty, but at least that has been concluded, and now we have completed today the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Both of these pieces of legislation are an indication of the Federal Government's commitment to the importance of education, and this relates to this whole topic of welfare reform, as my colleagues have indicated.

One of the cornerstones of the various suggestions on welfare reform indicate that if we are going to solve this problem, we have to find jobs for these parents who are on welfare, and in order to do that, in many instances we are going to have to find the money to supplement the educational requirements that might be needed or the job training or counseling for the job research. It is an enormous task.

We are dealing with 5 million parents who are recipients of welfare assistance, with 9 million children currently on board. The suggestions being made by the administration and others with respect to the jobs I think are good but unrealistic. I do not believe there are going to be those jobs out there in any of our communities and in our States that are going to be easily available to individuals who are on welfare today. It is going to be very difficult.

We have people on unemployment compensation who are struggling to find jobs that are the equivalent of what they had or even half the equivalent of what they had. So the biggest task, as I see it, in this whole welfare reform is the attempt to connect the families to a job. It is going to be extremely difficult, and it is going to be costly. There is no doubt the cost of the welfare program is going to double or maybe even triple if we are going to do a good job to educate for those jobs and train people.

So the anomaly is that the whole issue of welfare reform comes to focus because many people are looking at it as a way to save money, to close down the deficit or help balance the budget. But in truth, an honest look at the welfare situation is going to require a tremendous amount of money.

That is what brings me to my feet tonight, my colleagues, because there was an item in the New York Times yesterday which indicates that the final proposals on welfare reform have come to the White House and they have indeed called the Cabinet people together to discuss some of the provisions. And in discussing how they are going to come up with the monies that they believe are necessary to pay for the reform package, most of the suggestions were not that wholeheartedly endorsed.

So, in the end of the news article, there was a suggestion that, "Well, maybe we will just go for the reform, the tough, punitive measures first, and put aside the attempt to fund some of these costly requirements for reform."

I find that suggestion extremely shocking and disturbing, and I hope that the reports were not true.

One of the things they said they could put aside was childcare. How could any welfare reform proposal come forward without the support for the parents in terms of childcare? There is no possibility they could go for training or education or counseling or whatever and hold down a job without childcare.

Also, the astounding part of the suggestion coming from the welfare reform task force is that they want to target the youngest recipients, those below 25 years of age. When you take the youngest segment of the welfare recipients, you are going to take the youngest children, the infants, under-1-year-of-age category. What is startling about that is you are not only dealing with ordinary daycare childcare requirements, when you get into infant care, it is infinitely more expensive. So, we are talking about a very large requirement for funding.

I think that there are some things that basically have escaped those who are looking at this whole issue. The President has said, "Let's do away with welfare as we know it." Well, the problem, I think, out in the country at large is that people really do not know what welfare is. They have all the visions and the myths, but the realities really are not known. People think, for instance, those on welfare, the recipients, are ill-educated, have not gone to school at all, are not capable of working and, therefore, the intense focus is on this work for wages kind of concept.

I have taken the trouble to ask the Congressional Research Service to dig up some of this information. They probably got some of it from the Department or the Census Bureau, but I think it is very interesting that for the welfare recipients who are on welfare, this so-called 24-month period, that 41 period of them already had their high school diploma or their GED, 4 percent had their GED.

The other kinds of statistics, I think, that are important to understand in looking at this whole picture of the welfare system is that 42.5 percent were on welfare for less than 2 years.

What we see in the statistics on welfare is this high mobility. We see these young families coming on under age 25, perhaps, coming on welfare, but they do not stay there on a continuous basis. They are out. They are holding down a job. They are trying to help themselves. They are not just coming on welfare and staying there.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have got to adopt a policy that says, "2 years and you're out."

There are more than 60 percent of the single parents who are on welfare who are trying to find a job and, in fact, do go out to get a job, and because the requirements are so strict, Mr. Speaker, the moment they earn anything they are dropped from the rolls, and, when they are dropped, that very, very important element of support is gone. No one is out there to help them with job training, or help them to find a job, or to place them in suitable work, and, as a consequence, they are out 6, 7, 8 months and cannot make it, and they are then forced to come back on the welfare rolls again.

My suggestion to the administration and those who are working on this whole issue:

Instead of arbitrarily saying we are going to set up a program that is going to take care of everybody under 25, why not look at these individuals on welfare right now? May be as many as 2 million out of the 5 million who are on welfare who are honestly trying to help themselves—and the records prove it—they are going out there and getting a job. They are not staying on a continuous basis. They are going out. They are working. They are not finding good jobs because nobody is out there to help them. They are not being trained. They are not given support.

So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the task force that they look at this potential group of almost a half of those on welfare rolls today who by their own initiative indicate a real desire to help themselves by getting a job. These are the ones that we should concentrate on. They are the ones that have the highest potential of success that could immediately eliminate 50 percent of our welfare requirements today. With a little help, allow some of them to keep their earnings, allow them to have the earned income tax credit benefits, let them stay on food stamps, keep them on the AFDC rolls for 6 months or 8 months. Give them child care because that is one of the biggest reasons they cite for finally, after working 6 or 7 months, they simply cannot put it together, and then they come back on to welfare again.

So I think we have right within the whole data complex to key to where I believe the emphasis ought to be: those on welfare today, that by their own initiative have demonstrated their desire to get out there and work.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I do not like about the 2 years and you're out, I would say to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS], is that it is forced labor. It is forcing people out. And I do not believe that we need to do that to reform the system. All we need to do is to look at the people who are earnestly trying and they are not making it, and if we help them, we would cut the rolls by 50 percent almost immediately. We would know because of the initiative that has been demonstrated that these are the ones that are looking for self-sufficiency, they are the ones that are going to have the highest rate of success.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS. I find some of the statistics the gentlewoman cited a bit astounding. I ask the gentlewoman, "Did you say that 45 percent have high school diplomas?"

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Those that are in the AFDC for 24 months or less, have a high school diploma: 41 percent. That is that group that is out there looking for work, going out and maybe getting something. But because we have tossed them out, more or less, the minute they get a job, cut off their support, no child care, they cannot make it.

Mr. OWENS. If they have a high school diploma already, then we can conclude that they probably do not need a very costly job training program. They need training for jobs, but they have a lot to offer when they come to the training for the jobs, and what they need is training for jobs that are realistic, that are going to be there. Once the training is finished, they are going to have jobs there.

We have some jobs of that kind in my district. My congressional district has a medical complex which includes a large municipal hospital and also a medical school, a down state medical center that has a medical school and a hospital attached to it, and it has an allied health professions program there with the medical complex.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Exactly that kind of program.

Mr. OWENS. A program to train people for 1 year. In 1 year of training one can get certain categories of jobs: practical nurse, child care aide, and one or two others. So just to have a 1-year training, one gets trained for a job that is going to definitely be there and stay there. Those jobs are always there. If one gets 2 years' worth of support and can go to school for 2 years, then they can enter the middle class.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Absolutely.

Mr. OWENS. They become record clerks, x-ray technicians. There are a number of jobs where they can come out of the program and not only get a job immediately in the New York City area or the Brooklyn area, they can go anywhere in the country, because those people are in demand, and the demand is increasing all the time. Yet our Department of Labor and their programs for job training have insisted that we can give only 6 months of training.

Mr. Speaker, the head of the school told me, "I cannot train anybody for anything in 6 months. But 6 more months and I can do something which is useful, and certainly for 2 years."

We need job training programs which make sense and are attached to the reality of today, and one reality is that health care, health professions, anything related to health care, is a solid occupation and likely to increase, but that is not there.

The gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK] also said that welfare—a lot of recipients who do not stay on welfare very long——

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. It is 2 years. Forty-two percent are less than 2 years.

Mr. OWENS. So 42 percent of the people do not need to be told, 2 years and you're off, because in less than 2 years they are off.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. They are, but a lot of them come back on again because they do not have the support right now, and that is what we need to bring a stop to.

Mr. OWENS. It is very interesting to note that it appears that welfare would be one of the more efficient Federal programs, in that people who receive assistance, large numbers, do get off and make the attempt after 2 years.

Not so with the farm subsidy program. Not so with the cattle ranchers who are using public lands for grazing. Huge numbers of people who gain assistance, who seem to think that the Government owes them a living on and on, forever, and they are in the middle class and making lots of money. And most Americans citizens, most of the taxpayers out there, are not aware.

I just want to take a moment, if you do not mind, to get back to the theme of welfare reform. It should be a time when we look at the larger picture, the larger situation with respect to Federal subsidies. It ought to be subsidy reform, because a lot of the funds we need to deal with people who are on welfare, in terms of being able to supply them with child care and supply them with decent job training, why can the Government not provide 2 years worth of training for everybody?

When we have Pell grants and student loans, so people can go to college, they get a certain kind of assistance from the Government that other people do not get. We ought to guarantee everybody 2 years of educational assistance.

That means that those people who have the high school diplomas, if they are given 2 years of assistance to go into a program for medical training, they would come out of that program and be able to get a job.

Now, we need to give the money for that. If the Labor Department needs the money, one of the places to get the money for job training and more child care is by cutting all of these other programs where people are receiving subsidies for decades and endlessly.

I want to refer to an article that appeared in the Washington Post on March 6 of this year. The title of the article is "The Fat Cat Freeloaders: When American Big Business Bellies Up to the Public Trough."

It talks about other forms of welfare. I will just read a little bit and ask unanimous consent to enter it into the RECORD because it is not that long. James P. Donahue is the author of this article that appeared in the Washington Post on March 6.

It begins as follows:

> The current vogue of welfare reform in Washington is curiously narrow. After all, ending welfare as we know it means cutting off not only the proverbial unwed mothers, but also those corporations that have grown fat feeding at the public trough.
>
> This year taxpayers will spend $51 billion in direct subsidies to business, and they will lose another $53.3 billion in tax breaks for corporations, according to the Office of Management and Budget and the Joint Committee on Taxation.
>
> Those who want welfare recipients to work as a condition of public assistance should expand their efforts to cover corporations dependent on Federal largess. The most costly form of corporate welfare in 1994 will be subsidies for agri-business, subsidies for the farmers.

And we have less than 3 percent of the population now engaged in farming. Less than 3 percent of the population receives subsidies for their agribusiness, costing an estimated $29.2 billion. I did not say million, taxpayers. Listen carefully. I said billion; $29.2 billion to subsidize farmers, to pay them for growing less crops. And you pay again because you pay higher costs for their food.

Getting back to the article, however,

> By contrast, the Federal Government will spend $25 billion on food stamps and $15 billion for Aid to Families with Dependent Children, two of the programs most criticized by conservatives in the welfare reform debate. Ignoring the cost of corporate entitlements distorts the welfare debate and leaves most Americans with the false impression that poor people, rather than corporations or middle and upper income individuals, are straining the National budget.

I said before I am in favor of welfare reform. I am in favor of reforming any aspect of government that has been in existence for a long time. But if you are going to look at welfare reform fairly and with real logic, you have got to look at subsidy reform.

Going back to the article,

> One Federal bureaucracy that has been especially indulgent of free loaders is the Bureau of Land Management. The Bureau of Land Management rents out public lands to ranchers for cattle grazing. In 1992, the Bureau of Land Management's annual grazing fee was $1.92 per animal, according to the National Wildlife Federation. But private land owners were charging those same ranchers an average of $9.26 per animal.

You, the taxpayers, were allowing rich ranchers to graze their animals on your land for $1.92, when the going market rate was $9.26 per animal.

> The low grazing fees amount to a Food Stamp Program for livestock belonging to wealthy ranchers.

I am quoting, and I want to repeat that.

> The low grazing fees amount to a Food Stamp Program for livestock, belonging to wealthy ranchers. In 1992, the Government's below market rates cost the taxpayers an estimated $55 million in revenues. A typical beneficiary of this subsidy is J.R. Simplot of Grand View, ID. He paid the Government $87,430 for the privilege to graze cattle on public land. According to the National Wildlife Federation, if the Government had billed Simplot at free market prices, he would have had to pay $410,524.

It is not as if Simplot is going to suffer without this public assistance. He is on the Forbes 400 list of richest Americans, with an estimated net worth of just over $500 million.

Let us look at welfare reform in the larger context. Let us establish new perimeters for the discussion. If we collect it from millionaires like Mr. Simplot, what he owes, then we could have the money to deal with welfare reform and help people who are real victims get the kind of training they need and get the kind of jobs they need.

I am going to quote one more piece, and then I will pause for a moment on this article.

> Another Federal handout to corporations is the Department of Agriculture's market promotion program. This year the program will give American companies $100 million to advertise their goods and services abroad.

There are others, and I will not quote from them right now. I may get back to it later before I submit this article.

My point is, you have talked about the fact that you have a population here that probably large numbers could help themselves if they had just a little better help from the government. We do not supply that better help because we say it costs too much.

Keeping people on welfare the way we keep them on now is really the cheapest form of helping people. That is one reason we have it. To put people to work means you have to give them a decent education and training. That costs more than we have been willing to pay so far.

We have sources for getting the funds, if we would just take the welfare, the fat cat, the free loaders off welfare, and apply that money to the kinds of programs that my colleague is discussing here. I look forward to hearing further discussion from her.

Mrs. MINK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, the big issue facing the White House, as the gentleman knows, is they have the proper thoughts about welfare reform, the necessity for education and training and counseling and job searching, and maybe even the necessity of public service jobs if there are no private sector jobs and child care. But the problem is how to pay for it.

□ 2230

The gentleman is correct. There are many ways to pay for it. The shocking thing is, as the White House Task Force has looked for ways to pay for it, they are thinking taxing food stamps, taxing public housing tenants, taxing the welfare benefit itself, taking legal aliens off of SSI and Medicare and some of these programs. So your contributions on how this thing could be paid for, I think, are extremely noteworthy. I hope that the White House is listening and paying attention to your suggestions.

The important point is to make the point over and over again, and that is, welfare reform is not a means to reduce the deficit or to balance the budget. It is a sincere effort, I hope, to help these poor people help themselves to get a job. I am not for forcing them out of the home.

An interesting statistic, my colleague, again, I picked it up from CRS, is that 77 percent of the parents on welfare coming on the first time and staying on that 2-year period have a child 1 year or younger. This means that if you are targeting that young group, you are going to have to find the most expensive child care programs for the infants and the 1 and the 2-year olds. It is going to be an extremely expensive endeavor.

The second suggestion that I made to the White House was, if cost was a problem, to augment this program immediately, they ought to think in terms of the parents who have school-age children. They are in school, kindergarten, first grade, whatever. And so you do not need that full-time child care requirement.

You need after-school care. You need summertime care, but at least that school time responsibility can be met by the public school system. So that is a way of getting into reform, helping these families locate a job.

As I said earlier, the high school diploma situation is not as egregious as is purported to be, when they start talking about the education requirements.

Let me give you more details about the education, because I was fascinated with it, particularly as we were talking about elementary-secondary education.

Out of the 5 million parents who are on welfare, those that have no high school at all number 440,000. These are 1990 statistics. Those that have some high school at all number 1.3 million. Those that have completed high school are 1.5 million. Those that have had some college number about 400,000, and those that are college graduates are somewhere between 30 and 60,000. So we have a group of individuals here, I believe, that with a little assistance, a little encouragement and incentives and support, are going to be very, very successful in terms of assistance in finding a job.

But they do not need to pushed out and put to this "2-year and you are out" kind of discussion. I find that idea the most disconcerting.

Mr. OWENS. For a long time in New York State we had a debate on whether or not welfare would provide, help keep women on welfare who wanted to go to college. They have to get a special waiver to go for 2 years, and that was permitted for large numbers of women. But then the debate on whether to let anybody go for 4 years. It never got resolved. I think they never did that. Is there any discussion of that?

Throughout the States, I think they have the option for the 2 years. How many States do allow 2 years of college for people on welfare? They can stay on welfare while they are going to college for 2 years.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. I am not aware that there is an limitation, but that is certainly a point that needs to be looked at. What I do have a statistic here for the 1991–1992 school year is that 448,643 AFDC recipients were attending college with a Pell Grant. That is a real self-help, a drive, a significant number.

Mr. OWENS. That is good. It probably has improved, the situation, since then, since that debate took place. But there are large numbers.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. The picture I am trying to create is a different kind of welfare recipient than what the so-called welfare as we know it kind of myth. These are people that are struggling to improve themselves. They are going to college, getting their GED and participating in the jobs program, which the Congress created in 1988.

The problem with the jobs program, it was under-funded. It did not really reach out to enough of the parents.

In my State there is a long waiting list. Many people want to get on it, want to get the assistance of education and job training.

In 1992, the statistics show only 274 AFDC parents were even on the jobs program. As I understand it, it requires matching. So here is a case in which the Federal Government could take over responsibility of that wonderful program that was enacted in 1988, fully funded, make it a Federal program. And I believe that many, many more of the parents would take advantage of that.

Mr. OWENS. You estimate, according to your statistics, maybe as many as two-fifths of the people on welfare could get off with just some enhancement of the job training and education program.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Easily.

Mr. OWENS. So we would go down from 5 million families to something like 3 million families.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Even 2 million, I believe, we could do that, about 50 percent.

Mr. OWENS. More intelligent, more well-directed job training and education program and a program fully paid for by the Federal Government, because States and local governments have balked at supplying any percentage of the funds needed for the training.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Well, you can just look at the AFDC payments in many of these States. A State like Arizona, $293; Alabama, 124; Florida, 294 per month average family, one-parent family with three, two children.

Mr. OWENS. One parent family with two children gets $124 a month.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. That is Alabama, yes. And let us look at Arkansas, $204. My own State, $632, not too bad. California, $694.

Let us look at New York. New York is $703.

I think that the assistance should be standardized. There should be some way in which the government could decide what a family in each of these states requires to sustain themselves, a family of a size of three and that everybody ought to get that same support.

Mr. OWENS. Do you have in your statistics the amount of money that Social Security, children who are beneficiaries of Social Security Survivors Program?

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. That is not included in this.

Mr. OWENS. That is uniform across the whole country. All children get a certain amount of money. It is generally higher than the amount they receive in AFDC. Every child is understood to be worth, under the Social Security program, a much higher amount than the AFDC program.

Some of the things you have just cited in some States, $124 a month in Alabama for a family of three, you could see why welfare is so rampant and welfare has persisted for so long. In order to really provide an alternative to welfare, to provide training, to provide day care and jobs, a job would cost far more than $124 a month. In fact, it is ridiculous to even think about trying to provide anything significant with $124 a month. So that welfare becomes a symbolic thing that is done by, in this case, the State of Alabama, and some other State. When you compare the cost of living in the State with the amount of money recipients are receiving, it is just as bad.

Welfare is the cheapest form of providing assistance to victims of the economic deficiencies of our society. It is our society that is economically deficient. The least our society can do for any individual is provide an opportunity to earn a living. That is basic. The social contract with human beings is that human beings give up their existence in nature. The do not steal and rob and use their strength and their own abilities to get what they want, because to society, they surrender that to the society to provide ways in which they can meet their needs in some legal way.

We violate a social contract when we create a society where we do not have basic jobs available so people can earn a living. They ought to be able to earn a living. Any time you have a society that does not provide any jobs for people to earn a living, that society is deficient. Our economy is deficient. We should finds ways to provide income-producing opportunities for people, all people.

Welfare has been an alternative, a substitute for meeting the real needs of people. Welfare has been an alternative, a substitute, for this society not meeting its obligations to provide meaningful income for people.

Everybody should be required to work who is able-bodied and can work, but they cannot work if the jobs are not there. As I said before, there is plenty of work to do. There are plenty of things that need to be done to clean up our environment, there are all kinds of human service programs, infrastructure needs to be built. There are all kinds of jobs that could be created, but government must take a role in creating those jobs and take the responsibility for maintaining jobs at a certain level.

If we can maintain jobs and employment at a certain level in a society, then the welfare problem goes down to zero, or down towards zero. It does not go to zero because there are always people who are not able-bodied, there are people who are going to be dependent, the elderly, and there are some children who do not have parents. There are a number of groups that will be dependent, but it can go down to a very small percentage of the total population if you apply yourself to the economic and the job and employment problem in our society.

What we should understand, as we go into this discussion on welfare reform, taxpayers, is that welfare has existed for so long because welfare is the cheapest way to pretend that you are meeting the needs of your society. Welfare is the cheapest way for us to pretend that we are compassionate. It is the cheapest way for us to carry on the myth that we care about the poorest people in our society, to carry on the myth that we care about children. What can we provide for children with $124 a month, or in some other States with higher standards of living, $230 a month? You cannot take care of children properly. You can only symbolically say that you are doing something for them.

If we come to grips with it and deal with it in realistic terms, then we have to provide more income for families, and the way to do that, the number one way to do that, is to have the government have an ongoing job creation program, a job generation program,where they stimulate the economy so that private industry does it all the time, most of the time, and when private industry cannot do it, government provides the jobs to make up for it.

If you manage the economy properly, you can probably stimulate the economy so private industry is able to create the jobs, and you do not have to create the jobs that are run directly by the government, but you must start out with the premise that it is the duty of government to make certain that employment opportunities are out there for everybody at all times. That is the kind of welfare reform that is all-encompassing and most meaningful to all of us.

Mrs. MINK. Absolutely. Again, I emphasize that 43 percent of the AFDC parents work.

Mr. OWENS. They are already working?

Mrs. MINK. Already working. In that 2-year period, they go out to work. But 40 percent return within a year. They do not stay out even 12 months, because——

Mr. OWENS. You have not even mentioned health care, the fact that after they get off AFDC, they cannot get Medicaid, they do not have health care.

Mrs. MINK. That's right. So the whole thing is a tragic kind of circle that we need to make the American people understand better.

Mr. OWENS. I would just like to conclude this portion by including for the record the article entitled "The Fat Cat Freeloaders" that appeared March 6, 1994 in the Washington Post:

[From the Washington Post, Mar. 6, 1994]

The Fat Cat Freeloaders—When American Big Business Bellys Up to the Public Trough

(By James P. Donahue)

The current vogue of welfare reform in Washington is curiously narrow. After all, "ending welfare as we know it" means cutting off, not only the proverbial unwed mothers, but also those indolent corporations that have grown fat feeding at the public trough.

This year, taxpayers will spend $51 billion in direct subsidies to business and lose another $53.3 billion in tax breaks for corporations, according to the Office of Management and Budget and the Joint Committee on Taxation. Those who want welfare recipients to work as a condition of public assistance should expand their efforts to cover corporations dependent on federal largesse.

The most costly form of corporate welfare in 1994 will be subsidies for agribusiness, costing an estimated $29.2 billion. By contract, the federal government will spend $25 billion on food stamps and $15 billion for Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC), two of the programs most critized by conservative in the welfare reform debate. Ignoring the cost of corporate entitlements distorts the welfare debate and leaves most Americans with the false impression that poor people, rather than corporations or middle and upper income individuals, are straining the national budget.

The problem is that corporate welfare has created a culture of dependency that has encouraged certain industries to live off the taxpayers. Year after year, these companies receive subsidies or handouts from the federal government and never learn to fend for themselves. And, unlike the vast majority of poor people who receive public assistance, most corporate welfare recipients are not particularly needy.

One federal bureaucracy that has been especially indulgent of freeloaders is the Bureau of Land Management. The BLM rents out public lands to ranchers for cattle grazing. In 1992, the BLM's annual grazing fee was $1.92 per animal, according to the National Wildlife Federation. But private landowners charge their grazing customers, on average, $9.26 per animal. The low grazing fees amount to a food stamp program for livestock belonging to wealthy ranchers. In 1992, the government's below-market rates cost the taxpayers an estimated $55 million in revenues.

A typical beneficiary of this subsidy is J.R. Simplot of Grandview, Idaho. He paid the government $87,430 for the privilege to graze cattle on public land, according to the National Wildlife Federation. If the government had billed Simplot at free-market prices he would have had to pay $410,524. And it's not as if Simplot is going to suffer without public assistance. He is on the Forbes' 400 list of richest Americans with an estimated net worth of just over $500 million.

A spokesman for Simplot said ranchers need the federal subsidy "to keep their operations going. * * * As Far as the term 'welfare' goes, there's not a lot of money in ranching and it's a damn tough business. It costs more to run a set of cows on public land than it does on private land because there are such vast distances and you've got to haul water for the cattle to drink."

Another federal handout to corporations is the Department of Agriculture's Market Promotion Program. This year the program will give American companies $100 million to advertise their goods and services abroad. The corporate citizens with outstretched palms include some of the biggest names in American business. In 1991 and 1992 Sunkist Growers, Inc. received $17.8 million to promote citrus products, according to the Agriculture Department figures. The Department gave the American Soybean Association $10.4 million in 1992 to promote soybeans. In 1991, Gallo Wines received $5.1 million to promote wine, M&M/Mars received $1.1 million to promote candy bars, the Campbell's Soup Co. received $450,000 to promote V–8 juice and McDonald's took $465,000 to promote Chicken McNuggets.

The government, according to Gallo Wine spokesperson, Dan Solomon, is merely addressing a neglected national problem: the fact that Americans drink more imported than domestic wine. "Export markets are difficult," explains Solomon. "The [market promotion] program has significantly cut the wine deficit in California."

The government's failure to charge reasonable fees or sales prices for mining minerals on publicly-owned land is another form of corporate welfare. Other countries, such as Australia and Canada, do not coddle their mining companies, charging up to 12 percent in rents and royalties, for extracting minerals on public lands. In contrast, the U.S. Interior Department charges no rents or royalties and allows companies to mine government land for virtually nothing. The House Committee on Natural Resources reported last November that in 1988 the government had transferred 20 land titles to private companies in exchange for less than $4,500. The land, according to the General Accounting Office, was worth in the range of $14 million to $48 million.

Perhaps the biggest beneficiary is the American Barrick Resources Corp., based in Toronto. Since 1987 the company has extracted $8.75 billion (yes, billion) worth of gold from a site in northern Nevada that is the property of the American people. According to the Natural Resources Committee, the federal government is now preparing to sell the land to American Barrick for all of $15,000. Oh yes, the founder of the company paid himself $32 million in 1992.

Vince Borg, a vice president of public affairs for American Barrick, rejects the notion that the company has benefited unduly. He says that American Barrick has spent $11.5 million since 1987 to maintain its claims on the land while awaiting final approval of ownership from the government and has paid $80 million in corporate income taxes. Borg also claims that American Barrick has spent a billion dollars developing the Nevada site. The government's generosity, according to Borg, is "quite contrary to a subsidy * * * it's an investment in highly skilled jobs." American Barrick employs 1,500 people at the mine in Nevada, a rather modest payoff for the loss of $8.75 billion in gold.

Deadbeat corporations also take advantage of the taxpayers. For example, forestry companies that signed contracts to purchase government timber at a set price in the mid-1980s and then defaulted owe the U.S. Treasury $135.6 million. The corporations claim that they are justified in breaching the contracts because of falling lumber prices. But there's no reason why taxpayers should have to protect companies in pursuit of profits from normal business risks. Hampton Tree Farms, Inc. of Portland, Oregon, for example, owe the government more than $18 million in 1993 for 11 timber purchase agreements during the 1980s. A federal court dismissed the government's claim in nine of the purchase agreements on a technicality, a ruling that the government is challenging. The parent company, Hampton Resources, is one of the largest wood products companies in Oregon and owns 66,000 acres of timberland in the state. Its refusal to reimburse the taxpayers on the two outstanding purchase agreements is costing the taxpayers still more.

Another example: In 1990 the Forest Service incurred between $35.6 million and $112.2 million in expenses while selling the public's timber, but failed to recover this cost in its sales prices. The net effect is that the public spent the money to help corporations purchase timberland that was exploited for private profit.

Major pharmaceutical companies are on the federal dole too. While the Government pays for a substantial portion of the research in developing new drugs to fight disease, private drug makers are provided exclusive rights to market and profit from them. Rep. Ron Wyden (D-Ore.) told a congressional hearing in 1993 that U.S. taxpayers had spent $32 million over 15 years to develop Taxol, an anti-cancer drug. Wyden reported that Bristol-Myers Squibb was provided extensive government data and exclusive commercial rights to Taxol in 1991 at which time it charged patients $986 for a three-week's supply. The drug company declined to provide the National Institutes of Health with any data about what it spent on developing Taxol or on how it established the drug's price; Wyden estimated that Bristol-Myers Squibb's price was six to eight times the production cost of the drug. Cancer patients have already helped finance the invention of Taxol once as taxpayers. Why should they have to pay Bristol-Myers a second time as consumers?

Corporate welfare is sometimes rationalized on grounds that it promotes "competitiveness" and provides a level playing field against unfairly advantaged companies. The Agriculture Department's Export Enhancement Program is supposed to help U.S. agribusiness compete against foreign firms subsidized by their goverments. Private companies receive free shipments of wheat, corn and other commodities from U.S. government preserves. Between 1985 and 1989 Cargill, Inc., Continental Grain Co. and Louis Dreyfus Corp. received commodities worth $444 million, $429 million and $300 million respectively from the government. Think of it as government cheese for hungry corporations.

Given that corporate welfare represents only a tiny fraction of the overall net worth of corporate America, shouldn't its societal benefit be scrutinized at least as closely and widely as AFDC? The "two years and out" proposal for individual welfare recipients should be linked with a similar time limit on corporate welfare payments.

More generally, we need to expand what we mean by welfare reform. President Clinton, who recently appointed the members of an "Entitlements Commission" to deliberate how best to reduce the cost of "entitlements," should broaden the definition of the panel's work to cover business entitlements, too. It's time to take the corporate welfare Cadillac off the road.

THOUGHTS ON WELFARE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. LAUGHLIN). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. MINK] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Speaker for affording me the opportunity to continue on with this discussion. It is a very complex issue.

Mr. Speaker, the matter that I want to turn to now is a proposal that comes from our colleague, JAN MEYERS of Kansas. She has proposed that one of the ways to deal with this problem of welfare reform is to require teenagers under the age of 18 who become pregnant and have a child as a single parent be required to live at home.

As I said earlier, I am not for forcing people by law, by mandating, that they go to work. I believe that given the incentives and the support of child care and so forth, that these parents will go to work. They can improve themselves. Just by earning minimum wage, they would get better than $125 a month.

On this teenage parent situation, perhaps the moral argument ought to be that society should try to encourage the teenager to stay at home and remain with their parents, but this cannot always be the case. You might have an abusive family situation, totally disengaged with the reality of providing the support for this teenaged parent, and so again, I do not support the idea of creating a mandate that applies to all teenagers below the age of 18.

In raising this issue, the proponents of this idea leave the impression that out of the 9 million children that we are dealing with, that we have a huge number of teenagers that are mothers. This is not the case at all. Again, I have asked for the statistics from the Census Bureau and the Department of Health and Human Services, and their reports that I have here indicate that we are talking about a very, very small number of individuals, very small.

Totally, in the whole United States, in terms of female adult AFDC recipients by age, totally in the United States, out of the nearly 4 million in this particular census period, those teenaged mothers between the ages of 14 and 15 number, countrywide, 3,932; 16 years of age, they number 11,795; 17 years of age, they number 31,453.

I submit that those are not such large numbers as to require a Federal mandate. It is not such a huge problem that we have to deal with it in this sort of punitive way. We can create incentives so that the young teenaged mother would stay at home by allowing Federal support, irrespective of the fact that the parents are wage earners and maybe earn more than the family income criteria would require, and in some way encourage that teenager to maintain her household in that environment.

However, to go and force such a child to live in a home where her situation might be tenuous, at best, I thing is the wrong way to go.

Mr. OWENS. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Yes, I will be happy to yield.

Mr. OWENS. You have said that the plans that are being developed by the White House indicate they want to focus in on the youngest welfare recipients, which means that the ones coming in now, the youngest ones, would have the youngest children.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Exactly.

Mr. OWENS. Is there any scientific evidence that supports their reasoning there in terms of the taking away out of the home, or they are saying they are going to cut them off in 2 years? It means a woman with a new baby, the baby is 2 years old, taking the mother away from a 2-year-old baby. Does that jibe with current scientific evidence about raising children? Or will it do more harm than good by throwing those children into an artificial situation? Even the best day care cannot make up for what a mother could do at home. Are they considering all of this?

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. It goes exactly against the best scientific information, which says the best nurturer of the child is the mother of the child.

□ 2250

So to break up this relationship in a forceful manner by mandating a law that requires this seems to me an abrogation of our public policy stances, which has always been to support the family. We always stand up and say, "I am for the family," and we debate how much we excel in terms of your beliefs in the family and mine. And yet when it comes to something like welfare reform, we somehow feel that we can abrogate these fundamental beliefs, and I think that is wrong.

Mr. OWENS. Do they give any reasons for singling out this particular category?

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. I must admit that I was shocked in talking to some of the members of the task force. They argue that they must start with the youngest in order that welfare does not become as habit.

Mr. OWENS. Oh, I see.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. They are into this myth, welfare as we know it, myth.

Mr. OWENS. What about the habits of the mothers who are on welfare and the child is 6 years old? They are saying that they cannot be saved?

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Cannot be saved.

Mr. OWENS. It is more reasonable to take the 5-year-old and 6-year-old as the cutoff point where the child is older and able to go to Head Start or school, kindergarten or regular school, and they are just going to overlook all of the evidence that all of the psychologists and the experts on raising children have shown? So we are going to create a generation of scarred children who do not get the nurturing, who have a multitude of problems.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Separated from their mothers.

Mr. OWENS. So we have to have more support services for them when they get to regular school, and then eventually they are going to have a larger percentage of the juvenile delinquents, and later on the criminals. We are just going to throw away all scientific evidence and march into something on the basis of not much sound evidence.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Current Federal law says if the mother has a child 3 years or younger they cannot even be part of the jobs programs. So we have always kept to this idea that the best nurturer of a young child is the mother. But of course if she wants to go out to work, then we help to find child care. But this is a forcible policy that they are trying to enact, a requirement that unless you sign up, the day you register for welfare you have to sign a contract with the Government saying yes, I will go for education; yes, I will go for job training; yes, I will be in a job within 2 years. That is the contract that you have to sign to go on welfare if this whole program comes about.

So what we are doing is forcibly requiring these young mothers with infants to sign up in order to get welfare, cash assistance, to say that they will abandon their children and seek a job outside the home.

Many of the mothers do that. I certainly as a person who has stood for women's rights and opportunities have always said women ought to have that option if they wish to work. But certainly I do not believe it is appropriate for the Federal Government to pass a law that requires this policy.

Mr. OWENS. We are driven by some forces that are irrational here. I said before I hope welfare reform does not become revenge on the poor where we throw away any reason because there is a scream out there by people who really do not know who the fat cats on welfare are, and do not realize they are being swindled out of their taxpayers' money day in and day out by people who are in some cases billionaires. They just see poor people and they want to get revenge, get rid of any benefits that they are getting, and they lose their perspective, we lose our perspective and we create more problems than we solve. We are going to scar and hurt children in ways that will make it more costly for society in the future.

I want to thank the gentlewoman from Hawaii. I am going to have to leave now, but I look forward to further dialogues with her. I hope that the American people are watching closely as we develop this welfare reform program. The gentlewoman has facts and statistics and is on top of the program and following the development of the plans in a way which is commendable, and I look forward to the use of her monitoring of the program as a resource. I have in my district large numbers of people who are on welfare. I have large numbers of people on welfare who tell me all of the time that they would like very much to get off. Nobody seems to want to stay on welfare. And one of the major problems they point out right away is that they cannot find a job, and the jobs that they find do not have health care. And immediately, if you have a child, the first thing you worry about is being able to have some way to deal with their health problems that will not cost you an arm and a leg. They just cannot on a minimum wage job, and most of the jobs are minimum wage jobs, where they can barely make ends meet in terms of food, clothing, and shelter, and if the child gets sick, if you do not have health care, you are wiped out. And I imagine that many of the mothers, you say they leave welfare and they come back, I would wager if a detailed study and analysis were made of why they come back, a sick child probably is often one of the reasons that they come back.

We want welfare reform. I am all for welfare reform. I am all for the principle that people should not accept any Federal handouts, any government subsidies, you know, without a closed end. It should not be on and on assistance, it should not go on and on without some kind of a terminal point.

But that should apply across the board to everybody, all Federal subsidies, all assistance to victims. And I think that if there is going to be a 2-year rule for welfare, we ought to calculate how much money is involved in that. It may be that even in very liberal States like Hawaii and New York we are talking about $15,000 a year as a subsidy, which over a 2-year period would be $30,000, and that may be the standard, $30,000 of assistance to all victims in America. If you are a victim of anything, if you are a victim of an earthquake you are entitled to $30,000.

If you are victim of a flood, you are entitled to $30,000 worth of assistance. If you are a victim of a hurricane you are entitled to $30,000 worth of assistance. The farmers, they have already gotten their $30,000 a long time ago. But maybe we will give them 2 more years at $30,000 a piece, and the ranchers who are grazing on the lands for free, and making big profits, we give them $30,000 worth of discounted grazing, and that is it.

Let us be fair right across the board, and we would save a lot of money by being fair, having the same standard apply to them, and we would save a lot of money that would allow us to be able to provide the kinds of job training, and the kinds of education and child care that would solve the welfare problem.

It is a pleasure to hold this discourse with the gentlewoman, and I look forward to it in the future.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. I thank the gentleman very much for his support this evening.

In discussing welfare, there is just so much information that I feel that the American public ought to have to understand what we are talking about. People have some impressions about welfare, but I do not feel that they are really necessarily based on facts.

Going back to this teenage parents, talking about it one gets the impression that there are millions of these teenage mothers out there on welfare. The fact is that they are remarkably few in number, as I indicated.

The gentlewoman from Kansas, who has proposed this idea of requiring the teenager under 18 to remain at home, in her State there are as total of 24,824 female adults who are on AFDC, and these are statistics from October 1991 to September 1992. In the age group 14 to 15 years of age, Kansas had zero teenagers, none whatsoever. In the 16-year category they had a total of 74 out of the 24,824 total AFDC recipients. In the 17-age category there were only 99 youths, young mothers. And this provides a grand total of 173 youths that would be affected by such a rule.

The problem is not very large. It is small. The States ought to be able to handle it on a one-to-one basis. The caseworkers ought to be able to go and talk to the young mother and find out what is best for that family situation.

There ought not to be a law that requires a certain action to be taken under those circumstances.

Even a big State like California with 575,000 females on AFDC in the age category of 14 to 15 years of age, there were only 1,151, and in the same category of 16, the same number, and in age 17, 4,027, for a total of 6,329 all total.

The statistics are available. The Commerce Department has provided the information. For my own State, I wanted to insert in the RECORD that in Hawaii under this particular table we had 14,646 females; in the age category of 14 to 15, zero; at age 16 years of age, only 29; and 17 years of age, only 29, and these statistics are available, and you can request them from the census or in your own libraries across the country look up this information.

There is one other subject that I wanted to mention before closing my special order this evening, one that I think raises some very grave concerns for the Congress and for the general public.

I know how popular it is to zero in on foreigners and aliens and to argue that the country has no responsibility to aliens in our midst. Our country has always had a policy of inviting people from all countries, all walks of life, all kinds of economic circumstances under a very strict quota basis, under very strict requirements, under strict refugee requirements to come to the United States and to make it their home, our home. That has always been the policy of the United States.

Under Supreme Court decisions, we have always maintained that one who is legally in the United States must be accorded the same treatment that U.S. citizens are treated and, therefore, we have struggled not to make any distinctions between those who lack citizenship but who are legally here in the United States.

This is different from the illegal immigrant problem. There you have special concerns, and we need to deal with those separately.

One of the suggestions that the welfare task force has come up with to try to raise the moneys necessary to pay for welfare reform is to take legal immigrants off of certain entitlement programs, Medicare, welfare, SSI, and a range of other things in the hope that by doing this they could raise enough money to pay for the welfare reform package. I think that this is a very bad idea. It reduces our country to setting up a different category of treatment or concern, compassion for people within the United States.

There is even a bill in the Congress that suggests that if you were born of an illegal parent that you could not become a U.S. citizen. That is a violation of the very basic policies throughout the world. Wherever you are born you are a citizen of that country, and so many of these ideas are now kind of impinging upon rational thought, and so here we have a suggestion that legal immigrants ought to be treated differently in terms of many of our programs.

I saw a very interesting article in today's Washington Post, and it is entitled, "Immigrants' Benefits At Risk; House Alliance Wants Fund For Welfare Reform."

What is interesting about the article is it states 85 percent of the noncitizen SSI recipients live in seven States, California, Texas, Florida, Illinois, New York, Connecticut, and one or two others. I did not discern it from the map. It also states that those who are legally in the United States, that the very largest number come from Mexico, 93,000. These are legal immigrants that would be affected by this ruling. There are 35,590 from the Philippines; there are 32,000 that have fled Cuba and have come to the United States and are legally within the United States; there are 30,000 from China who came after the uprising in China and were legally admitted into the United States; 30,990 Chinese; there are 40,030 Soviet Jews who are legally in the United States that would be affected by this program; 17,990 Vietnamese whom we invited to come to this country at the end of the Vietnamese war; 13,000 Laotians and 11,000 Cambodians. These are the people that are going to be affected by the harsh kind of recommendations that are coming from the welfare reform task force, saying that notwithstanding that they have been for some reason or another given legal status in the United States, coming in, fleeing their country, from Cuba, from Vietnam, from the Soviet Union's oppression of the Jews, coming from Laos and Cambodia from very difficult circumstances, that now because we have to find funds to support the welfare reform program that the benefits that they would otherwise be entitled to would be terminated.

No wonder word has come out from the White House that there was some vigorous discussion about such a proposal, and I would hope that the idea has been scrapped and that they will look for other ways suggested by the gentleman from New York for the funds that are necessary.

The important point in what the administration is struggling at this point is we have the criteria for reform which is education, training, counseling, job search, finding the job in the public or private sector, and then being able to assure child care for the single parent so that they could actually hold a job down, and the reality is setting in that this is a very expensive endeavor. And if we are to accomplish this reform as it is now described, moneys have to be found.

The current welfare program is costing the Federal Government about $17 billion. That is 1 year, $17 billion. My own personal estimates on the cost of what I know my friends are paying for child care today that we are going to perhaps double or triple that amount of money with just the addition of child care, not to mention what the costs of education and training are going to be. Child care for most families on welfare, according to the statistics I have seen, require about a quarter of what that family earns just to take care of the child care expenses. So no wonder that after a few months off of welfare they find it impossible to survive when they have to come back for the cash assistance that welfare affords.

This problem is a very difficult one, because it cannot be solved by simply passing laws that have no budget consequence. This is a reform effort that is going to be extremely costly, and what we are really dealing with is the systemic problem of poverty and the problem of trying to help people find jobs, suitable jobs that can lift them up out of poverty. I hope that the administration will carefully look at these questions that many of us have been raising in special orders and in correspondence and in "Dear Colleague" letters that have been circulated and join hands with us in looking at all the alternatives that we have suggested as probably appropriate, if not more appropriate ways to deal with this problem.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MY COMMITMENT TO AMERICA

HON. JIM COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

MY COMMITMENT TO AMERICA

(By Autumn Cartmill, Post 1893, Winchester, TN)

Imagine—A knock at the door with the news of the passing away of a distant relative, one who has left you a million dollars. You can almost feel the excitement just thinking about it. Well hold your enthusiasm. We have all inherited such a gift, but its greatness is magnified a thousand times over. This gift is commitment. The strong faith and commitment of our forefathers gave them a plan for the ages. This plan was embodied in a document that was destined to secure the liberty and freedom of all Americans. It would establish rights for each individual without discrimination. They developed this Constitution through commitment. Those steadfast beliefs enabled our fledgling country to develop into a great and powerful nation. Our forefathers passed down this torch of patriotism and loyalty to the next generation in hopes that these ideals of freedom would live on and that the flame that was ignited would, in those early words, "forever be tended". Today, my generation must guard this birthright of freedom and liberty and do what is now our obligation for future generations. I have been handed this torch of freedom by my family. My father and grandfathers have carried my right to freedom from the South Pacific Islands of World War II, across the frozen 38th parallel of Korea, into the highlands of Vietnam, through Panama, and back from the arid wastelands of Iraq. Unselfish acts of love for the ideals of this country, for me, for you, and for generations to come. Now, it is my turn to maintain the strength and nobility of our United States. How will I, a high school student, achieve this? With foresight and perseverance? SURELY! With old fashioned grit and determination? WITHOUT A DOUBT! With patriotism, love, and sacrifice for my country? ABSOLUTELY! These are ideals that determine my actions and define my heart and soul.

While I am a highly motivated person who has excellent communication skills and the ability to confront any problems that face me, I must rise to the challenge my country presents me: I must spread the tenets of democracy and I must defend the principles of equality, no matter what conflicting views thwart me or how many discording voices assail me. I must choose to set my goals high-striving only for what is best for myself, my country, and future generations.

To be the best for our country is always important, especially when we strive to maintain freedom for generations. I intend to further my education by attending a university where I can become knowledgeable in international affairs. I have prepared for such a career while still in high school by attending Governor's School for International Studies, by hosting exchange students, and by leading youth groups on missionary work. These activities have helped me in understanding what the current issues of our nation are in the international arena.

Though I cannot see the future, I can work for that future. By participating actively in writing and speech competitions, you will hear my voice speak out against apathy and for involvement as it develops commitment in leadership. I will work for and support the leaders of my generation to see that America continues to safeguard the liberty that was long ago won by the Revolution. I will take up as my battlecry the belief that all men are created equal and have a divine reason for being alive. Each American, black or white, male or female, deserves to be treated humanely, with dignity, and above all with honesty. I am committed to secure liberty for every man, woman, and child under the American flag. So, long after this competition is over and the tape has collected dust on a shelf, I can guarantee that you will still hear my voice as it fights to maintain and represent the most powerful yet wonderful country—the United States of America. I know what I am willing to do with my inheritance; what will you do with yours?

TRIBUTE TO FRANCIS A. QUINN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, Mr. FAZIO and I rise today to pay tribute to a truly special individual who has contributed significantly to the physical, mental and spiritual health and welfare of countless Sacramentans.

Francis A. Quinn was appointed seventh bishop of Sacamento in 1979. In the 14 years that have passed since then, Bishop Quinn has worked tirelessly with a myriad of service agencies and organizations to secure a better way of life for anyone in our community who was in need.

Bishop Quinn was born September 11, 1921 in Los Angeles. In 1946, he was ordained and went on to the Catholic University of America and then to the University of California at Berkeley, where he earned his doctorate in education. In subsequent years, he taught at Serra High School, then at Sacred Heart High School, then served as superintendent of schools at the Archdiocese of San Francisco and later as an instructor at the University of San Francisco.

In 1978 he was ordained Auxiliary Bishop of San Francisco. Eighteen months later, Francis A. Quinn became Sacramento's seventh bishop.

Apart from the demanding schedule which comes with such a large and sprawling diocese as Sacramento, Bishop Quinn quickly established himself as a fixture among the community's service organizations.

His affiliations are too numerous to list but include a very diverse and effective collection of groups who greatly value the Biship's years of support.

A partial list of these organizations includes the Interfaith Service Bureau; AIDS Walk; Amnesty International; NAACP; United Nations, Sacramento Chapter; Knights of Columbus; and Bread for the World. In addition, he is Episcopal moderator for Sacramento Diocesan Council of Catholic Women, Catholic Ladies Relief Society of Sacramento, Social Concerns Commission of Sacramento Diocese and SUCCEED [Sacramento Urban Catholic Children Endowment Education Development]. As if these commitments were not enough, Bishop Quinn is an annual sponsor of numerous organizations and events including the Special Olympics, St. Hope Academy for Disadvantaged Children, Loaves and Fishes, Sacramento Food Bank, and Habitat for Humanity.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that we rise to recognize Bishop Francis Quinn for his outstanding commitment to the citizens of Sacramento. We ask our colleagues to join us in congratulating him on 14 years of outstanding service and in wishing him continued success and good health as he prepares for a new mission in the American Southwest.

OPPOSITION TO CASTLE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 3345

HON. MARJORIE MARGOLIES-MEZVINSKY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Ms. MARGOLIES-MEZVINSKY. Mr. Speaker, we are all frighteningly aware of the crime problem our country is facing today. We are all too familiar with the startling statistics. Every day, more than 60 Americans are killed by handguns. The safety of our children is indeed a national priority. We cannot, however, ignore the fact that our children will not enjoy true security until this Government addresses what will end up as the biggest crime of all: our national deficit.

In voting for early buyouts in the Federal Workforce Restructuring Act, we are making a responsible choice. The 12-percent reduction in the Federal work force will save close to $36 billion over 6 years. In addition, we will be giving the right message to our Federal employees. By offering them an early buyout, we will be empowering them to decide their fate.

I opposed the Castle amendment to H.R. 3345, not because I do not support violent crime prevention programs, but rather because I believe that we must guarantee true security for our children by reducing the national deficit. We must also continue the fight against crime and should seek funding sources from unchecked Federal mandates, and eliminating government waste. I feel very strongly that any money achieved by the Federal Workforce Restructuring Act should be directed towards deficit reduction, and not just spent elsewhere. I refuse to contribute to this serious financial burden we are leaving to the future of America.

COMMENDATION OF DERRICK EIHAUSEN AND CHRIS PFLUG

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend Derrick Eihausen and Chris Pflug of Belleville Township High School. The two are students at Belleville Township High School East in Belleville, IL, and recently won the Illinois State two-student debate team title.

Fifty teams entered the competition in Bloomington, IL, where the topic was "Resolved: That the federal government should guarantee comprehensive national health insurance to all United States citizens." Chris and Derrick argued the negative position in the final round, and the five-judge panel voted 3–2 in favor of the team from Belleville. It is the high school's first-ever debate championship.

I ask my colleagues to join me as I salute Derrick Eihausen and Chris Pflug for the tremendous skill and dedication they displayed in winning the Illinois State two-student debate team championship.

THANKS TO AETNA

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, several months ago, I complained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD about two cases in my congressional area where seniors had been enrolled in a Medicare HMO arrangement, but the enrolling HMO—in this case Aetna—could not serve them. In essence, the two women—one suffering from severe mobility problems and the other suffering from dementia in a nursing home—were separated from the doctors who had been serving them without being able to access Aetna's HMO doctors.

I want to report that Aetna's management has carefully and fully investigated the two cases and has taken important steps to right the two cases and ensure that it does not happen to others. The facts as presented to me in the two cases by a local community health center were not fully accurate, for which I apologize. Nevertheless, in reviewing what went wrong. Aetna has found ways to make sure that this kind of problem is more quickly detected and rectified in the future.

If any Member has a constituent who, in confusion or through inadvertence, is enrolled in an Aetna plan in such a way to impact on their medical treatment, I urge you to contact Aetna. Their management has shown a willingness to walk a second mile to help resolve this kind of often complex and tragic case.

Following is Aetna's letter and description of corrective steps. I hope other HMO contractors around the Nation will do as well.

AETNA,
Hartford, CT, March 15, 1994.

This letter represents the follow-up I promised you when we discussed the problems raised by the Over 60 Health Center in Berkeley, California (in its two letters to Chairman Stark).

As you will recall the problems focused on the enrollment of two individuals into Aetna's "Senior Choice" program. In the first case the individual was reportedly solicited while a nursing home resident and in the second case there was some confusion as to program terms and conditions.

Sometimes no matter how hard we try, something unacceptable happens. For example, while it is clearly not the policy of Aetna to pursue the enrollment of nursing home residents into Senior Choice, in the first case at hand the individual was in a nursing home at the time of enrollment. The whole story reveals, however: that no Aetna solicitation or marketing took place at the nursing home (which would have been against Aetna policy); the actual enrollment was effected by the granddaughter and not the member herself; and the application submitted to Aetna clearly stated the individual was not a resident in a nursing home.

Thus in this first case, contrary to the implications/statements in the Congressional Record:

Aetna did not sign this individual up at a nursing home.

Aetna did not make a sales presentation at the nursing home.

The granddaughter (not the niece) enrolled the grandmother.

The application (signed by the granddaughter) said the applicant did not reside in a nursing home.

And in the second case, contrary to the implications in the Congressional Record:

The member applied to Senior Choice in response to direct mail advertising.

Subsequently the member was hospitalized and treated by non Senior Choice Providers.

When contacted by Aetna Health Plans, the member did not recall enrolling into the Plan.

From our perspective these cases do not in any way "fit" the characterizations of Aetna as printed in the Congressional Record. They do however point out the utility of being cautious, even to the point of being repetitive, to make sure senior citizens know absolutely, positively the terms, conditions and consequences of enrolling in a Medicare managed care plan (before, during and after enrollment).

While the harsh words in the Record are not deserved, our review of the two cases referenced in the Record has helped us formulate changes in our procedures with respect to the Senior Choice Program. These changes are designed to go the "next step" to minimize any potential shortcomings in our procedures. Our overall Corrective Action Plan will:

Solidify our education/marketing practices as they relate to communicating to potential and new members just what it means to sign up for a network-based product under Medicare.

Enhance our ability to identify and follow-up on continuing care issues and circumstances involving members prior to or as they enroll;

Enhance communications among departments to improve our ability to arrange for Medicare members to receive the services they need;

Improve communications with our Medical Groups/IPAs to make sure they understand their obligation to provide or arrange for care of institutionalized members.

The "bottomline" here is as follows:

Appropriate steps have been taken to disenroll both Senior Choice Members in these two cases and to re-enter them into "regular" Medicare.

All provider bills for Medicare covered services have been/will be paid for both individuals during the time of Aetna coverage.

All appropriate reimbursement to the Over 60 Health Center in connection with services to these beneficiaries will be made.

A series of corrective steps is being put in place to provide additional "safety net" procedural protections against repeat situations.

We are actively looking at our records to see if there are other cases that deserve our attention. You can be sure that if I uncover other situations, they will be handled with all due appropriate care. (If any cases come to your attention, please let me know.)

At Aetna we are quite mindful of the vulnerable status of our senior citizens and of our responsibility to make sure our Senior Choice Program is fully understood. We are not the kind of company as described in the 2/1/94 Congressional Record. We are rather the "White Hats" of the industry (as so identified by Chairman Stark at a Long Term Care hearing a while back) and by our conduct in the cases at hand, I think we have continued to earn this characterization.

We encourage you to use this letter to set the record (Record) straight.

We pledge to continue to serve our Senior Choice members with the highest quality of care. I look forward to hearing from you, and hopefully seeing some kind words about Aetna in the Record.

Very truly yours,
JONATHAN M. TOPODAS,

HEALTH CARE

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, they have just finished discussing their weekend dates and Thelma picks up a folder from the top of the pile and says, "This one is requesting a 506A."

"What a 506A?" Louise asks.

"George Washington Hospital's emergency room wants to know if the Government will pay for a broken leg that the patient suffered when he fell off his pickup truck."

"You can't authorize payment until the doctor submits a 1049C swearing to the seriousness of the break and tells us how much plaster he plans to use to set the leg. If he intends to mix more than is allocated under guidelines L subparagraph 45, he must apply for a 932. Where is the patient now?"

"On the same stretcher they carried him in on 2 months ago when the original application was filed with this department."

Sound outrageous? This is an excerpt from a column by Washington insider Art Buchwald. He foresees government-run health care as all Americans will if the Clinton plan is enacted, one big bureaucracy that will ration health care to save money. The Clinton plan paves the way from take-a-number medicine and I for one don't think the American public will want their loved ones waiting months for medical attention.

IN APPRECIATION OF FREDRICA K. GRAY'S 18 YEARS OF DEDICATED SERVICE TO THE PERMANENT COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect and appreciation that I rise in tribute to Fredrica Gray, executive director of the Permanent Commission on the Status of Women in Connecticut for her 18 years of service to the citizens of the Nutmeg State.

Fredrica Gray has served the commission with distinction and receives well-deserved respect and support for her distinguished leadership as a strong voice on women's issues for the State. The elimination of discrimination based on sex, development of relationships to promote services and opportunities for women, and the representation of women's priorities in the public and private sectors are but a few of the goals to which Ms. Gray has dedicated her professional service. The promotion of women's issues extends beyond a single individual, into family networks, the employment arena, and the development of sound public policy. Fredrica was the primary author of a legislative initiative developed to afford women and men the opportunity to balance both family and professional commitments. The adoption of family and medical leave legislation by the Connecticut General Assembly, the first State to enact such an initiative, was the direct result of Fredrica's extensive experience in identifying and addressing the unique needs of women and families.

A strong personal commitment to the betterment of life for all in our communities has led Fredrica to pursue the development of programs which support economic self-sufficiency and nontraditional employment opportunities for women, and to stem violence against women and sexual harassment in the work place. She has devoted her incredible energy, experience, compassion and leadership to economic, domestic and personal equity, advancement and opportunity for the women of Connecticut and for that unequaled effort, I, on behalf of my constituents in the Sixth Congressional District, express my gratitude and appreciation.

JOSEPH KASAPIS HONORED FOR LIFETIME OF SERVICE

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened to rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the sad passing on January 28 of Joseph Kasapis, a great Greek-American and an important member of my community in Astoria, NY. Mr. Kasapis was survived by his wife Sultana, their son and daughter, and one granddaughter.

Mr. Kasapis was born in Greece in 1928. He served in the Greek Army from 1951 to 1954, and then as an economist in the Ministry of Commerce for Greek Government.

In 1959, he married his lovely bride and emigrated to this country. In the 35 years that he lived in this country, Mr. Kasapis was actively involved in issues of importance to the Greek-American community. At various times during his lifetime of service to these causes, he was a founding member and subsequently the president of the Thessalonikian Society of New York, a member of the St. Demetrios of Astoria Church Council, governor of the Pan Macedonian Association of Greater New York, supreme president of the Pan Macedonian Association of the United States and Canada, chairman and then president of the Federation of Hellenic American Societies, and a founding member of the National Hellenic Council of America.

As you can see, his achievements speak for themselves. But what no encapsulation of his career can adequately capture is the fact that Joseph Kasapis was a man who loved the land where he was born and his adopted homeland with equal fervor. That's why I hope my colleagues will take a moment with me now to express our deepest sympathies to Mr. Kasapis' family and many friends.

TRIBUTE TO THE DISTINGUISHED WOMEN ELECTED OFFICIALS OF CALIFORNIA'S 14TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today during National Women's History Month to salute the remarkable women of California's 14th Congressional District who have been elected to serve our communities at the county and city level. The 14th Congressional District is special for many reasons, including the fact that it has one of the highest number of women elected officials in the Nation. For example, 10 out of our 15 cities have women mayors. These talented public servants bring unique ideas, perspectives, and skills to their offices and provide our district with outstanding leadership. Having gained valuable experience through local commissions, community organizations, and businesses, they now serve on boards of supervisors and city councils. National Women's History Month is the perfect opportunity to reflect on the significant contributions these women leaders have made to our communities, contributions which cannot be overlooked.

The 14th Congressional District's distinguished women elected officials are: Dianne McKenna and Zoe Lofgren from the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors; Mary Griffin from the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors; councilmembers Nanette Chapman and Dianne Fisher from the City of Atherton; Mayor Pamela Rianda and councilmembers Nancy Levitt and Adele Della Santina from the City of Belmont; Mayor Barbara Koppel and Councilmember Lauralee Sorensen from the City of Cupertino; Mayor Sharifa Wilson and Councilmember Myrtle Walker from the City of East Palo Alto; Mayor Naomi Patridge and Councilmember Deborah Ruddock from the City of Half Moon Bay; Mayor Margaret Bruno and Councilmember Patricia Williams from the city of Los Altos; councilmembers Elayne Dauber and Barbara Tryon from the city of Los Altos Hills; councilmembers Gail Slocum and Dee Tolles from the city of Menlo Park; Mayor Dena Bonnell and councilmembers Patricia Figueroa and Maryce Freelan from the city of Mountain View; Mayor Liz Kniss and councilmembers Jean McCown, Micki Schneider, and Lanie Wheeler from the city of Palo Alto; Mayor Judy Buchan and councilmembers Daniela Gasparini, Georgi La Berge, and Janet Steinfeld from the city of Redwood City; councilmember Sally Mitchell from the city of San Carlos; Mayor Frances Rowe and Councilmember Robin Parker and Barbara Waldman from the city of Sunnyvale; and Mayor Susan Crocker and councilmember Barbara Seitle from the city of Woodside.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring these women whose remarkable leadership, expertise, and commitment have made the 14th Congressional District a wonderful place to live. They are fitting representatives of the many women in our community who make history every day and whose numerous accomplishments we recognize on the occasion of National Women's History Month.

14TH ANNUAL RADIO VISION VOLUNTEER RECOGNITION DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived again to call to the attention of all of our colleagues the meritorious services provided by Radio Vision throughout our eight-county region of southeastern New York.

Radio Vision kicked off its unique services in the spring of 1980. It is staffed and maintained solely through volunteers. These dedicated individuals read local news, topical literature, shopping hints, and other vital information to the clients of Radio Vision over their unique closed circuit system. These clients, who now number over 600, are the blind and sight impaired for whom Radio Vision has been a window to the world.

While the blind and sight impaired can certainly listen to radio news just as the rest of us do, we must not forget the vast segments of our population do not have access to much of the information that is available to the rest of us. Local news, new literature, news of sales in local stores, periodical items—all of these sources of information, entertainment and intellectual stimulation are made available by the fine services of Radio Vision.

Today, Radio Vision enjoys the services of over 85 outstanding volunteers who give of their time, their efforts, their voices and their hearts to this worthy cause.

While Radio Vision's volunteers work tirelessly and selflessly 364 days a year, for 1 day each year they stop and justly pat themselves on the back for a job well done. This year, volunteer recognition day will be held on Saturday, April 9. This is the one time all year that the Radio Vision volunteer team, along with Radio Vision director Daniel Hulse and volunteer coordinator Carol Cleveland allow the rest of us to thank them, not only for a job well done but also for being an inspiration to the rest of our community.

Mr. Speaker, I invite all of our colleagues to join with me in saluting Radio Vision, the outstanding service for the blind and sight impaired in southeastern New York, for a job well done over the past 14 years, and in extending my best wishes for many many more years of health, happiness, and productivity.

EPA ADMINISTRATOR

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, last week EPA Administrator Browner made some comments with which I am in complete disagreement.

Ms. Browner directly blamed Congress for the delay in setting food safety standards. Her attack focused on a supposed inability to move pesticide-use legislation through the Congress. In truth, however, it is the administration's inaction that has slowed the reform process. Where are their guidelines for protecting the food supply? The administration has been talking about offering its own legislation for months now, but we have yet to see a concrete proposal.

Meanwhile, H.R. 1627, the Food Quality Protection Act, has the support of almost a majority of Congress, but has been held up due to the expected release of the administration's proposal. H.R. 1627 would allow the EPA the discretion to establish standards based on realistic health and economic benefits. In the context of Congress' support of cost/benefit analysis in environmental policy, the administration would be well-advised to offer environmental legislation which also relies on real-world assessments of risk and economic cost.

I thank Mr. Stenholm for committing to mark up H.R. 1627, and I hope my colleagues and the administration recognize the importance of effective risk assessments in setting food safety standards.

TRIBUTE TO DENISE GARLAND

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the fine work and outstanding public service of Denise Garland of Apple Valley, CA. Denise is a longtime WeTip volunteer who will be recognized as the "WeTip Woman of the Year" at an awards banquet during WeTip's 21st National Conference in April.

As you know, WeTip is one of America's leading anticrime organization's. Founded in 1972 by Bill and Miriam Brownell, WeTip began as a group of concerned parents who took on drug trafficking and crime in California and has grown into a major force in fighting crime in our country. The results have been both dramatic and impressive. Information from WeTip has aided law enforcement in making 10,200 arrests of major criminals and over 4,000 cases resulting in convictions. The concept behind WeTip is simple, yet effective. WeTip provides an anonymous toll-free hotline to citizens who have information about a crime and want to report it to authorities without having to reveal their identity. WeTip information is immediately conveyed to appropriate law enforcement agencies.

Denise has been a long time active participant in the WeTip program. She has served as sheriff's service specialist for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department since 1987. She has worked as a volunteer for WeTip since that time in Rancho Cucamonga, Victorville and currently serves as WeTip regional chairperson for the Apple Valley, Hesperia, and Victorville area. To no one's surprise, Denise was overwhelmingly chosen by secret ballot as the 1993–94 Woman of the Year for her outstanding work in Apple Valley.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me, our colleagues, and our many friends dedicated to the success of WeTip in congratulating Denise Garland for her dedication to this fine organization and her support of public safety. In her many years of devoted service, Denise has touched the lives of many people in our community and it is only fitting that the House recognize her today.

HONORING GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. MARJORIE MARGOLIES-MEZVINSKY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Ms. Margolies-Mezvinsky. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor Friday, March 25, 1994, as Greek Independence Day. Each day we are reminded of the valuable contribution Greek society has made to contemporary society as we enjoy the spirit of democracy. For the past 7 years, the House of Representatives and the Senate have jointly saluted Greece, as we do today.

In the past, Greece has played an important role in the development of democracy throughout the world. Those ideals, born 2,500 years ago are still with us today. On behalf of my constituents of Greek descent, I am pleased to join the United States Government in celebrating Greek heritage and the spirit of democracy. I am confident that the United States will continue to honor our ties to both ancient Greece as well as the Greece of today.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MORRIS SNIVELY

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Morris Snively of Belleville, IL. Mr. Snively was recently named National Speech Educator of the Year by the National Federation of State High School Associations.

Mr. Snively is an English, speech, and debate teacher at Belleville Township High School East in Belleville. I ask my colleagues to join me as I congratulate Morris Snively for his outstanding contributions as both an educator and a mentor to young people.

RECOGNIZING MAYOR MICHAEL SWEENEY FOR HIS YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE CITY OF HAYWARD, CA

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to pay tribute to Mayor Michael Sweeney for his 12 years of dedicated service to the people and city of Hayward. During his tenure, Mayor Sweeney has provided strong leadership to a city which has risen to new heights.

Mr. Sweeney was first elected to the Hayward City Council in 1982 and quickly became one of the its most popular members through his efforts to respond to the needs of the community. He led in establishing a rent control ordinance, that provided enormous help for hard-pressed seniors and mobile home residents. By continually fighting to protect the Hayward hills and shoreline, he has immeasurably helped the environmental quality of the city and won the support of the environmental community. He also helped energize neighborhoods, block-by-block, through his dedicated involvement with the neighborhood alert groups.

Mr. Sweeney's activism was rewarded in 1986 when he won his reelection to the council with the highest total of votes for any candidate, and in 1990 when he was elected mayor by winning 70 percent of the vote. I believe this success can be attributed to the mayor's community involvement approach. An example of this is when he formed a task force during the Hayward schools crisis. Mayor Sweeney promptly brought together parents, educators, business leaders, and residents, who quickly issued a series of recommendations to alleviate some of the problems. The leaders of this task force continue to meet and offer its input to the school district.

Mr. Speaker, I come before you today to recognize Michael Sweeney for all his achievements and continued commitment to our community. I hope you and my colleagues will join me in congratulating this leader for all his accomplishments and tenacious spirit and wish him well in his future endeavors.

CLINTON TO IGNORE LAW OF THE PEOPLE AND ADMIT HIV-INFECTED IMMIGRANTS INTO THE UNITED STATES

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, last May the American public spoke their will and the Congress enacted a law to ban the immigration of individuals infected with HIV, a deadly communicable disease of public health significance. This legislation made it absolutely clear to the White House that HIV-infected immigrants pose a threat to the health and well-being of American citizens.

Well, here it is not even a year after the enactment of the ban and President Clinton is poised to run rough-shod over the will of people. The Clinton administration is preparing to allow HIV-infected immigrants to enter the United States to participate in the New York Gay Games in June. This directly conflicts with both the spirit and letter of the law and it is outrageous.

With all the efforts being made to prevent the spread of the AIDS epidemic, how can the President knowingly admit new sources of contagious diseases into our country? President Clinton should stop playing politics to win the approval of a few liberal organizations and start using a little common sense.

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and admiration that I rise to pay tribute to the 37 firefighters who are being honored for their unwavering service to the citizens of Torrington, CT, at the Annual Firemen's Award Night dinner scheduled for March 30, 1993. Their commitment to the safety and well-being of the people of Torrington and its surrounding communities is, indeed, worthy of distinction.

Last July, 10 firefighters from the Torrington Fire Department rescued two men from a sanitation truck that had accidentally become entangled in high tension wires. The accident snapped two telephone poles, releasing a cable television line and three electrical wires carrying 13,000 volts of electricity. It caused two brush fires, a fire in the truck's load of corrugated cardboard and a power outage affecting approximately 500 residents. Thanks to the quick work by these firefighters, the two men walked away from this potentially fatal situation unharmed.

This past January, L. Richard Oakley, a 34-year department veteran and Todd LaMothe, a 2-year rookie went above and beyond the call of duty, entering a burning building to rescue three children from a first floor apartment. The blaze required 50 firefighters to extinguish and claimed the lives of two children, Christopher and Jennifer Small. The third child, 3-year-old Jeffrey Small was saved by these brave firefighters.

On another occasion, Torrington firefighters spent hours searching the murky water of Burr Pond hoping to save a 16-year-old YMCA day camper from West Haven.

These men and women are, indeed, a rare breed. Courageously, they put their lives on the line each day—often in situations where they are keenly aware of the realities of personal injury or worse. Yet, as the deputy chief of the Torrington Fire Department recently put it, "firefighting is a thankless job." the Torrington Fire Department and others across America deserve our thanks, as it is their meritorious deeds that have saved the lives of thousands each year. Accordingly, I would like to thank them for their service, as they may be often overlooked, but never forgotten.

TISH AND GUIDO CIANCIOTTA HONORED FOR COMMUNITY SERVICE

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor two tremendous members of the Greenpoint-Williamsburg area of my district, two individuals who have worked tirelessly on behalf of their neighborhood, two Americans who exemplify the true meaning of community service: Tish and Guido Cianciotta.

I have been deeply privileged to work alongside Tish and Guido on issues of importance to the residents of northern Brooklyn. That's why I am especially pleased to inform my colleagues that their many years of hard work were recently recognized by the dedication of one of the new neighborhood women's renaissance buildings in their honor.

Tish and Guido's leadership of the Concerned Citizens of Withers Street and Area Block Association has resulted in their vision for a better community becoming a partial reality. But as Tish pointed out at the dedication ceremony, there is still much more to be done. And I know, without a doubt, that Tish and Guido won't rest until their job is completed.

Their recent successes have given me the opportunity to reflect upon what makes a community special, and there is no doubt that the northern Brooklyn area of my district is a special community. I believe that what makes this community such a great neighborhood is the presence of people who are willing to give their time and energy to causes in which they believe. It is the very essence of democracy; it is what makes this country great; and the Greenpoint community can always count on Tish and Guido to be there fighting for what is right.

It would take too long to recite all of Tish and Guido's accomplishments here today. Suffice it to say that they are integrally involved in nearly every major community organization in Greenpoint-Williamsburg—including the Greenpoint Renaissance Enterprise Corp., Community Board 1, and, of course, the Concerned Citizens of Withers Street and Area Block Association. You cannot walk down the street without meeting one of their many friends and fans, a group of which I am a charter member.

Because of their tremendous achievements, I am truly excited to have the opportunity to come here to the floor of the House of Representatives and salute Tish and Guido. It has been my privilege to get to know them over the past 2 years, and I look forward to working with them for many more to come.

TRIBUTE TO THE SANTA CLARA COUNTY COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN OF CALIFORNIA'S 14TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today during National Women's History Month to honor the important work being done by the Santa Clara County Commission on the Status of Women. In 1974, this commission was established to promote affirmative action, as well as eliminate discrimination and prejudice against all women. The 15-member commission advises the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors about the diverse needs of women in the county and makes recommendations on how to address these critical needs.

The commission has worked on a broad range of issues such as sexual harassment, pay equity, teenage pregnancy, the concerns of homeless women, child care, child support, and cultural/ethnic differences. The commissioners have worked closely with members of the community to bring about real change for women and children in Santa Clara County. For example, the commission has organized local educational workshops, sponsored public forums and hearings, and operated an important county information and referral service.

This remarkable organization is committed to celebrating and honoring the accomplishments of all women and has sponsored a women's history day called, Celebrating Women Making History: Celebrating Diversity. It has also organized events such as Women's Equality Day, Women In Action Lobby Day, the Second Annual Leadership Conference for Young Girls and Young Women, and the national Take Your Daughter To Work Day.

I am proud to represent a district with such a deep commitment to women's and children's issues. I bring the example of the Santa Clara County Commission on the status of women before the House as a model of the way local government can address the unique problems women face in our society.

Mr. Speaker, someday when we look back in history, I hope that efforts like these will be the norm, rather than the exception. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting the Santa Clara County Commission on the Status of Women and the vital contributions it is making to our community.

TRIBUTE TO HON. HAMILTON FISH

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, all of us are aware and are saddened by the pending and premature retirement of our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Some of our periodicals in the Hudson Valley of New York share our sense of loss and have expressed this regret editorially.

I would like to share with our colleagues in the Congress two articulate and poignant editorials. The first appeared in the Sentinel, a weekly newspaper published in New Windsor, NY. The second was published by the Times Herald Record, a daily tabloid from my home town of Middletown, NY, which points to Congressman FISH's career as "a two-word argument against setting term limits for Members of Congress."

Mr. Speaker, I request consent to print both editorials in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point:

[From the Sentinel, Mar. 17, 1994]

THE END OF AN ERA?

With his announcement Monday, Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr. became the second local political veteran to announce that he wouldn't be running for reelection in November. Unlike Assemblyman Lawrence Bennett, who made his announcement last week, Fish cited health reasons for his decision.

For the people of the Mid-Hudson Valley, Fish's announcement could mean the end of perhaps the longest continuous political dynasty in American History. The Fish family involvement in government and politics predates the Declaration of Independence.

Col. Nicholas Fish served in the Revolutionary War and was the first Adjutant General in the State of New York.

His son, Hamilton Fish was a Governor of New York, U.S. Congressman, U.S. Senator, Secretary of State under President Grant and turned down an appointment as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by Grant because he felt he was underqualified.

His son, Hamilton Fish, Jr., was an eleven-term state Assemblyman and a U.S. Congressman.

His son, Hamilton Fish, Sr., was an All-American football star at Harvard, commander of an all-black regiment in World War I, co-founded the American Legion, served in the New York State Assembly, and was, for 25 years, this area's representative in Congress.

And his son, Hamilton Fish, Jr., announced Monday, that after 25 years, he was leaving the House of Representatives.

Senator Edward Kennedy said of the Fish family, "When people talk to day of the 'Kennedy Dynasty' in politics, I reply that we're Johnny-come-latelys compared to the Fishes! What an extraordinary family, and what an extraordinary service they have given our country."

Ham Fish, Jr. had some legacy to live up to. And he did. A thoughtful, intelligent man, he represents an individual that is all too rare today—a statesman. In this era of media politics and sound-byte ideology, Congressman Fish knew very well that his job was not as a politician, but as a representative of his constituents. He did that job to the best of his abilities.

There is, of course, another Hamilton Fish, the congressman's son. He has sought office before and may do so again. If he does, he will have a long shadow cast over him. A shadow of public service that's more than 200 years long.

[From the Times Herald Record, Mar. 19, 1994]

AN ERA ENDS

Want to hear a two-word argument against setting term limits for members of Congress?

Ham Fish.

Thirteen terms representing the people of the 19th Congressional District of New York. A quarter of a century of public service marked by consistency, common sense and civility. (And how's that for an arcane word to use in connection with a politician today?)

Having carried on in the tradition of his father, the late Hamilton Fish Sr., who also served in Congress for a quarter of a century, Hamilton Fish Jr. is not seeking re-election because he has more pressing business: a battle with a recurrence of cancer.

Otherwise, the Dutchess County resident would be running for his 14th term this fall and opponents would be arguing that he had been in Washington, too long that it was time for a change. It's the only argument they had—weak as it was—because Fish has put those 13 terms to good use.

He is one of the few remaining voices of moderate Republicanism in the House, a congressman who doesn't automatically spout the increasingly conservative party line or go for the jugular merely to score political points. He votes his own mind, notably on social issues. He co-sponsored the Equal Rights Amendment. As a member of the House Judiciary Committee, he was one of the first Republicans to call for the impeachment of President Richard M. Nixon.

Locally, Fish has been a strong advocate for cleaning up the Hudson River and a conscientious monitor of West Point. He has fought a perennial fight to gain more federal funding for the Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District, which is heavily affected by the presence of West Point.

Through his seniority, the 67-year-old Fish has gained a position of prominence on the Judiciary Committee and—agree or disagree with his views—has become a voice to be listened to in debates about criminal justice. If he has been too cautious for some at times, he has never been crass in his comments. Another anomaly that—a politician who thinks before he speaks.

Ham Fish is retiring after 26 years in Congress. In that, he became as much a dynasty as his father, who lived to 101. May the family tradition of longevity continue with the son as well.

HUMANITARIAN AID CORRIDOR ACT

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Humanitarian Aid Corridor Act which is designed to restore credibility to our Nation's Foreign Aid Program by ensuring that U.S. humanitarian assistance is properly distributed to people in need.

This legislation stipulates that countries who receive U.S. foreign assistance must—as a condition of receiving U.S. assistance—not obstruct nor delay the delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance.

During these difficult budgetary times, it is essential that our Foreign Aid Program is run in a manner which maximizes the usage of each foreign aid dollar. Therefore, it simply makes no sense for our Government to continue to provide assistance to countries which deliberately impede the delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance. The refusal to allow medicine, food, and other essential items to be delivered to people in need is reprehensible. However, what is even more appalling is that our Government continues to give millions of dollars to governments which deliberately deny the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

The approval of this act will send a message around the world that the United States will no longer tolerate actions which impede U.S. efforts to assist people in need. No longer will countries such as Turkey for example, be able to thumb their nose at the State Department and deny congressionally approved humanitarian assistance from being delivered to starving people.

Turkey's actions are atrocious and have forced desperately needed assistance destined for Armenia to be channeled through the war-torn Republic of Georgia. Not only does this unnecessary diversion cost more money, but it jeopardizes the lives of Armenians. The time has come for this Nation to tell countries, like Turkey, that if they wish to continue to receive United States assistance, that they must act in a responsible manner.

Mr. Speaker, allowing a major recipient of U.S. assistance to deny the delivery of food and medicine undermines the goal of our foreign policy program. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this urgently needed legislation which ensures that people in need will be provided with the necessary resources.

TRIBUTE TO DICK HEATLEY

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the fine work and outstanding public service of Dick Heatley of San Bernardino, CA. Dick, who has demonstrated a remarkable dedication to the many public safety needs of San Bernardino County residents over the past 25 years, will be honored at the San Bernardino Elks Lodge on April 23 as he retires from his position as State Traffic Officer with the Inland Division of the California Highway Patrol.

Dick graduated from my alma mater San Bernardino High School in 1961 and has spent the majority of his law enforcement career in southern California. Because of his involvement and active leadership in the community, Dick has been an instrumental force in preserving law and order in San Bernardino County for many years.

Following his 4-year stint in the U.S. Air Force in 1965, Dick joined the San Bernardino Police Department as a patrol officer. Upon graduating from the California Highway Patrol Academy in 1968, Dick's career in law enforcement flourished. He joined the California Highway Patrol as road patrol officer assigned to the Baldwin Park area and later that year was reassigned to the Riverside area. While serving there, his duties included road patrol, accident review, and serving as a court and public affairs officer. For the past 7 years, Dick has been assigned to the Inland Division of the CHP serving in many vital capacities.

Dick's distinguished career is further highlighted by his active involvement in numerous organizations in the law enforcement arena. In addition to serving as the area representative for the California Association of Highway Patrolmen, Dick has served as president of the Area Squad Club in Riverside and the Division Squad Club while assigned to the Inland Division.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me, our colleagues, Dick's family, and his many friends in honoring this unique individual for his extensive work on behalf of the citizens of southern California. Over the years, Dick Heatley has touched the lives of many people in our commuinity and our State and it is only fitting that the House recognize him today and wish him the best of luck in the years ahead.

SALUTE TO BETTY SUZUKI

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Betty Suzuki, who is retiring from 30 years of successful public service to the county of Sacramento.

Ms. Suzuki began her career as a social worker in 1955, serving the counties of San Joaquin, Los Angeles, and Alameda. In 1963, she became a social worker for the County of Sacramento, whereupon she began her steady rise within the system.

In 1969, she was appointed social services supervisor I while pursuing her masters degree, and then in 1971, she was again promoted to the position of staff assistant to deputy director of services. The next year she was promoted to social service supervisor II where she served until her appointment in 1984 to welfare bureau chief of children's protective services, Department of Health and Human Services.

As a bureau chief and throughout her career, she has diligently fought for the rights and protection of the children of Sacramento County. Upon her appointment in 1984, Betty was assigned the task of bringing the CPS bureau into State compliance in 11 of 13 areas. She accomplished this task in under 6 months and the bureau has not been out of compliance since that time.

Counted among her many professional accomplishments include the passing of legsialtion for the State of California's Baby Doe laws. She also worked with the Department of Social Services to create legislation that resulted in the generation of the Options for Recovery Program in Sacramento County, as well as the Children's Health and Disability Prevention Program which has become a statewide system.

Ms. Suzuki has served on the Juvenile Institutions and Programs Committee, under the Criminal Justice Cabinet to deal with overcrowding in juvenile hall; and is also involved in the Annie E. Casey Foundation grant, providing essential services to minors. She served on the Juvenile Justice Delinquency Prevention Commission from 1982–84, and was the vice chair of the commission in 1984.

Betty has been the recipient of Sacramento's Outstanding Women in Youth Services award by the Friends of Mayor Ann Rudin in June 1993, and the Outstanding Contribution on Behalf of Children award by the Child Abuse Prevention Council in January 1989. Ms. Suzuki currently serves as a director of the General Board of Global Ministries for whom she represents northern California and Nevada. Her participation has included multiple projects affecting women, children, and youth.

Apart from her plans to travel and improve her golf game, Ms. Suzuki intends to remain active in her dedication to our community's challenges through service to commissions, consulting work, and lecturing.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to recognize Betty Suzuki for her commitment to the citizens of Sacramento. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating her and wishing her continued success and happiness in all of her future endeavors.

FANNIE MAE'S BOLD STEP

HON. MARJORIE MARGOLIES-MEZVINSKY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Ms. MARGOLIES-MEZVINSKY. Mr. Speaker, I want to applaud Fannie Mae on their new initiative which will serve to give millions of Americans, who were previously unable, the support they need to afford to buy a home.

I urge my colleagues to read the following editorial from the March 18, 1994, edition of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Mar. 18, 1994]

FANNIE MAE'S BOLD STEP

If money talks, the nation's largest home-mortgage investor virtually shouted this week when it announced it was prepared to make available $1 trillion to help Americans with modest incomes buy homes.

By committing twice as much for mortgages in the next seven years as it has in the last seven, the Federal National Mortgage Association (known as Fannie Mae) aims to provide access to the classic American dream, a home of one's own, for minorities, city dwellers, people with special needs and new immigrants.

In its bold attempt to remove the barriers—financial, racial or otherwise—that have kept homeownership out of reach of millions, the plan has the potential to transform the nation in nearly the same way federal mortgages did after World War II.

Since the announcement, an almost palpable wave of hope and joy has engulfed area housing experts, community leaders and even lenders. We, too, are excited by the scope of the plan, its commitment and, most of all, its potential for recreating the urban landscape. For home ownership is key not only to building strong families, but also to reviving neighborhood businesses and boosting community pride.

The Philadelphia region stands to gain plenty from this initiative. Philadelphia housing chief John Kromer's most recent analysis of housing needs found that while the homeownership rate here is a respectable 62 percent, almost 10.6 percent of all housing stock is vacant, and stock is even more scarce for those earning less than $30,000 a year.

Moreover, the Fannie Mae initiative can build on the success of existing programs, such as the coalition of eight area banks and 23 community groups that operate the Delaware Valley Mortgage Plan. Thanks to that plan, 18,000 families with low and moderate incomes have bought homes in the last 20 years.

This plan works largely because the banks offer flexible underwriting standards that count welfare and Social Security as income, and consider payment of rent and utility bills as proof of credit-worthiness. But banks can't sell such loans to Fannie Mae under current guidelines, a situation we think Fannie Mae should change as part of the initiative.

Such a change would automatically boost interest in neighborhoods now written off by banks more inclined to finance a handful of $300,000 mortgages than dozens of $45,000 loans. And such neighborhood investment is sorely needed to Philadelphia, where ambitious plans to spur the economy are focused more on creating a glittery downtown than on rebuilding the areas where most Philadelphians live.

VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM'S UTAH WINNER NICOLE HINTZE

HON. BILL ORTON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for my colleagues' interest and benefit the following essay written by Ms. Nicole Hintze, a high school student in East Carbon, UT. Each year students from around the Nation compete in the Voice of Democracy Scholarship Program essay contest sponsored by the Ladies Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Nicole, who is currently a senior at East Carbon High School, was selected as the Utah State winner. I would like to share her thoughts on "My Commitment to America" with all of you, in the hope that we can all share Nicole's dedication to preserving America and its freedoms for ourselves and our children.

MY COMMITMENT TO AMERICA

(By Nicole Hintze)

A man stood upon a mountain peak. In his being were the people of all nations, races, and creeds. There was a complete and awesome silence, and then the silence was broken by a voice asking this question, "For what purpose are you living?" Terrified and bewildered, the man sank upon his knees because he was in the presence of the Lord. In his confusion, he cried out, "For what purpose am I living? Why, Lord, the purpose of my living is everywhere evident. From our humming factories are coming thousands of things producing a civilization that has never before existed. We have conquered distance, developed the power of electricity, projected our voice thousands of miles through space, and have utilized the power of the sun. What we have done in the past is nothing compared to what we can accomplish in the next fifty years."

Again through the special abyss came this voice: "You have done all of these things, but think again, for what purpose are you living?"

If you had been asked this question, what would your answer have been? For what purpose are we living? The prospects for the next fifty years are breathtaking. What tomorrow will bring is almost impossible to imagine. We are only on the threshold concerning the conquest of disease and the ills of old age. Machines are becoming more and more efficient, making possible an ever-increasing standard of living. The robot factory is just around the corner doing away with the heaviest type of human labor.

Yet, there is something wrong with this picture. Our civilization is sick. Man stands huddled in fear amidst the countless gadgets of his culture. With every new invention has come the greater threat of wiping out his entire existence.

We have created many things to live by, but nothing to live for. What do we have to look forward to in our future?

Raymond E. Baldwin said, "Many of us often feel that, in the move of tremendous events, our individual voices are too small to be heard—that there is little we, as individuals, can do to direct the rushing course of history. But there is a field in which each of us can serve—and has a duty to serve—that is in his own community and among his own friends, to recall the good of our American system and join in efforts to improve whatever failings it has."

Not all of us can make a difference in our nation or even worldwide; but, with a little effort, every one of us can make a difference in our community, county, and even state. But, we can't sit back and let others worry about it; we must take the initiative to do it ourselves.

There are many reasons we should do this. Not only do we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to our children and grandchildren. We also owe it to our ancestors. They did their best to make America what it is today, and we must do our best to make sure it stays that way. John Quincy Adams said, "You will never know how much it has cost my generation to preserve your freedom and our country. I hope you will make good use of it."

What we do with our country today will carry on forever; therefore, we must try to fix and repair some of the damages already done. It is our responsibility and our commitment to make sure our nation stays great.

A nation is made great, not by its fruitful acres, but by the men who cultivate them; not by its great forests, but by the men who build and run them. America was a great land when Columbus discovered it. Americans have made it a great nation.

For what purpose are we living? The military geniuses, the scientists, and the politicians have not solved the world's problems. People all over the world are ill-fed, ill-housed, and ill-clothed. The fine hopes for a brave new world produced by war are gone. If there is any hope for the future, we must modernize an old Chinese prayer to read, "Oh, Lord, make the world, my country, my city, my church, my home, better—and begin with me." We have constructed wonderful buildings and destroyed human creativeness. We have learned to fly through the air and swim through the sea, and yet we do not know how to walk on this earth like men. We have established a better world in which to live, but now we do not know how to live in it.

We need to recall the words of former Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, "The peril to this nation is not in any foreign foe. We the people are its power, its peril, its hope."

Our commitment must be to do whatever we can to preserve America and the "freedoms" we take for granted. We must not forget our ancestors, our children, or our grandchildren. We must not disappoint them. We must do our part in our community, county, and state. We can make a difference; and that should be our commitment to America.

If we are going to have a better world in fifty years, we must work for it today. We must begin now. A great man once said: "I am only one, but I am one, I cannot do everything, but I can do something. What I can do I ought to do, and By the grace of God, I will do."

This is my commitment to America.

TWO DISTINGUISHED LEADERS OF GREEK ORTHODOX DIOCESE MOURNED

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened to rise today to inform my colleagues of the tragic deaths of two distinguished coworkers of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese, the Archimandrite Germanos Stavropoulos, chancellor, and Protopresbyter Dimitrios Frangos, chief secretary. The two priests were killed in an auto accident in New York on March 17.

Father Frangos was born in the village of Shinoudio on the Island of Imvros, near Turkey. He graduated from the Theological Seminary of Halki. In July 1939, he married Hariclia Papadopulu, who preceded him to death in June 1993. In 1940, Father Frangos emigrated to the United States and became pastor of the Holy Trinity Church in Norwich, CT, beginning a long and fruitful career of service. He then served 2 years as pastor of the St. George Church in Southbridge, MA; for 4 years as pastor of the Transfiguration Church in Lowell, MA; and then for 4 more years as pastor of the St. John Church in Boston.

From 1950 to 1961, Father Frangos was the pastor of the St. Demetrios in Astoria, NY. Thereafter, he was named director of the archdiocese department of education, and then the director of St. Basil's Academy in Garrison, NY.

Between 1974 and 1979, Father Frangos headed the archdiocese registry department, and in 1979, he was named chief secretary to the Archbishop. He is survived by one son, Dr. George Frangos; a daughter, Maria; as well as many other friends and relatives.

Father Stavropoulos was born August 14, 1942, in New York City. He attended Immaculate Conception School in Jamaica, NY, before enrolling at St. Francis Xavier High School. After graduating, Father Stavropoulos matriculated at Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology in Brookline, MA, earning his theology degree in 1966. He subsequently earned his licentiate degree after 3 years of study at the University of Athens School of Theology.

Father Stavropoulos returned to the United States in 1971. During the next 22 years he served at various times as the respected pastor of the Holy Cross Church in Southfield, MI; the Assumption Church in Danbury, CT; the St. George Church in East Norwalk, CT—where he was the driving force behind the construction of a new Byzantine-style edifice—and finally the Zoodohos Peghe Church in the Bronx.

In 1983, Father Stavropoulos was named administrative assistant for the New Jersey Diocese. In September 1992, he became chancellor of the archdiocese.

He is survived by his mother, Ethel Stavropoulos of Jamaica Estates, NY, and a sister, Sylvia Christakos of Essex Fells, NJ, as well as many other friends and relatives.

These two priests gave so much to their communities and our country. As the representative of one of the largest Greek-American communities in the United States, I am particularly hopeful that my colleagues will join with me in extending our most heartfelt sympathies to their family, friends, and the entire community. They will be missed.

CONGRATULATIONS TO PINCKNEYVILLE PANTHERS

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, one of the most dramatic moments in high school sports nationwide was provided by a basketball team in my congressional district during the State of Illinois Class A Championships last week.

In winning the State Championships March 12, the Pinckneyville Panthers and their coach, Dick Corn, brought heart-stopping drama in the final game of the season. The Panthers beat the Eureka Hornets 67–65 when, with seconds left in the game, Shane Hawkins passed to Ryan Bruns, who sunk a 12-foot jump shot at the buzzer to win.

The dramatic ending followed 32 minutes of hard fought basketball by both teams. That final game ended a fantastic season for the school, as Pinckneyville ended the season with a near-perfect 33–2 record. Now, for the first time since 1948, the Panthers bring back to southern Illinois a State championship.

I want my colleagues to join me in congratulating the outstanding athletic efforts of the Pickneyville Panthers and their tremendous victory in the Illinois State Championships. They demonstrated strong persistence, ability, and dedication as they defeated team after team in bringing home the winner's trophy. My congratulations to coach Dick Corn and all of the team's players.

CELEBRATING THE DEDICATION OF OLD ALVARADO—CESAR CHAVEZ PARK IN UNION CITY, CA

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to join my constituents in the dedication of Old Alvarado—Cesar Chavez Park in Union City, CA.

Shortly after the death of Cesar Chavez, leaders within this community quickly mobilized to pay tribute to this great human rights leader. Last year, the labor council for Latin American Advancement of Alameda County proposed to the Union City Council to rename Alvarado Park as Old Alvarado—Cesar Chavez Park, so that we could continuously remember the spirit of Chavez. The renaming of the park was not solely supported by the labor and city councils; the culturally rich community of Union City shared a universal appreciation for the life of Cesar. They recognized Chavez' efforts on behalf of all the lives he changed—not just the farm workers he represented through the Union Farm Workers of America, but all who fought the daily struggle or suffered from any social hardship or injustice.

With their tribute, Union City shares its recognition with friends like the late Senator Robert Kennedy who praised Chavez back in 1968 as "one of the heroic figures of our times." It is also appropriate that Union City is one of the first to honor his life, because it is a community that reflects the message that Chavez espoused. Cesar once described his work with farm laborers as an effort to raise their consciousness and create brotherhood through nonviolent means: This is a decree whole-heartedly embraced by this culturally rich community. It has always been a home to working people from all walks of life.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I come before you today celebrating with my constituents the memory of Cesar Chavez. I hope you and my colleagues will also join me in congratulating the community of Union City for their tribute to this great American.

CYPRUS REMAINS SEPARATED

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, July marks the 20th anniversary of the invasion of Cyprus. The situation there is a throwback to the cold war. Artificially divided and militarily tense, Cyprus deserves a better fate. The cold war is over—the long-divided Germans have reunited, and even Yemen has recently come together. Yet Cyprus remains separated.

The United States must vigorously support all efforts to bring an end to this tragedy. We own as much, both to the Cypriot people, and in respect to the beliefs that no country be given license to occupy another, that artificial ethnic separation is not an answer, and that peace and democracy be allowed to flourish in a reunited Cyprus.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that we insert two articles into the RECORD which eloquently describe the sad situation that has existed in Cyprus for nearly 20 years.

[From the Houston Post, Mar. 12, 1994]

WILL THE WALL TUMBLE DOWN?

(By Ken Hoffman)

NICOSIA, CYPRUS.—When the Berlin Wall came down in 1989, Nicosia was left standing as the world's only divided capital city.

Divided by force, religion, politics, mistrust and hatred.

In July 1974, the small Mediterranean country, culturally and politically aligned with Greece but lying only 40 miles south of Turkey, was invaded by Turkish fighter boats and 40,000 heavily armed commandos. Turkey had long coveted Cyprus, with its strategic location at the crossroads of Africa, Europe and the Middle East.

On the morning of July 20, under the pretense of protecting Turkish Cypriot minorities in Cyprus and with Cyprus in its usual turmoil, Turkey seized its opportunity.

Opposed by only 16,000 Cypriot national guardsman, Turkey's military objective was accomplished in less than one month.

Thousands were dead. About 180,000 Greek Cypriots were sent running for their lives to the south.

In their place, Turkey invited 55,000 Turkish Cypriots living in the south to move north. Eighty thousand settlers from mainland Turkey were brought to Cyprus to solidify Turkey's racial hold on the territory. The occupiers gave new Turkish names to Cypriot cities. Kyrenia became Girne. Famagusta became Magosa.

More demoralizing personally to the refugee Cypriots, Turkish invaders moved into their homes and took over their businesses.

BARBED WIRE, RIFLES

Now the country has a 112-mile impenetrable border of barbed wire and pointed rifles stretching from coast to coast.

From its western beaches to its eastern ports, the "Attila Line" and a narrow buffer zone patrolled by 2,100 United Nations soldiers keep Greek and Turkish Cypriots apart.

Cypriots are not allowed, under any circumstance, to cross the border. There is no telephone or mail service between north and south.

The northern 37 percent of the island has been renamed the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, an outlaw government supported solely by Turkey.

Since 1974, several United Nations resolutions have condemned the Turkish invasion of Cyprus and ordered the occupiers to leave. Turkey has ignored each demand.

The Turkish invasion was devastating to Cyprus in economic as well as in emotional terms.

Turkey's capture of North Cyprus was well-aimed. The occupied territory contains Cyprus' two prettiest resort cities, Kyrenia and Famagusta. They took over the country's lone international airport and only deep water port.

With the conquest of the north, 70 percent of the country's hotels were lost. Tourism was wiped out.

BORDER CROSSING

Tourists are permitted to walk through the Attila Line's only gate near the old Ledra Palace Hotel in downtown Nicosia.

The Ledra Palace was once Cyprus' most elegant hotel. Now it's barracks. Its elegant dining room is now a military mess hall.

To cross the border, you first show your passport to Greek Cypriot military officials. They will let you by, but only after asking politely that you not go. They point to a hand-painted sign that reads:

Attention!

Beyond this checkpoint is an area of Cyprus still occupied by Turkish troops since the invasion in 1974. The invaders expelled 180,000 Cypriots of Greek origin from their ancestral home and brought over colonists from mainland Turkey to replace them.

Enjoy yourself in this land of racial purity and true apartheid.

Enjoy the sight of our desecrated churches.

Enjoy what remains of our looted heritage and homes.

Below the sign is a painting of Cyprus with a bloody dagger stuck through the heart of Nicosia.

CYPRUS INVASION NOT FORGOTTEN

(By Ken Hoffman)

NICOSIA, CYPRUS.—Every night on television in Cyprus, they flash the message "DEN XECHNOUME." We have not forgotten.

Not forgotten Turkey's bloody invasion of North Cyprus in 1974 that killed 6,000 people and created 100,000 Greek Cypriot refugees in their own country.

Not forgotten that Turkey continues to occupy the country's most beautiful cities, the international airport and valuable port of Farnagusta.

Not forgotten that almost 20 years later, Cyprus is a divided island, with an outlaw government calling itself the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus ruling 37 percent of the land.

Most of all, they have not forgotten that Turkish soldiers and settlers stole their business and moved into their homes.

Evi Fiouri certainly has not forgotten.

In 1974, Evi was 13 years old, in her first year of high school. She lived in a small gray home in the north beach resort of Kyrenia with her parents and baby sister.

Evi remembers the morning in 1974 when she heard the bombs. "We jumped out of bed and went on the roof. We could see the Turkish boats. My father said we had to flee. Someone told us that Turkish soldiers had already landed in a western village and were committing atrocities," she said.

"They were raping girls and killing the old people. We had to go immediately."

Her father tried to calm his daughters. He said they would probably return in a few days.

"We were leaving just for security, until the problems with Turkey was worked out * * *. For awhile before, Turkish Cypriots had warned us that there would be an invasion * * *. But we thought it was impossible. It was too absurd."

RUNNING FOR THEIR LIVES

And then they heard the bombs.

Evi grabbed a small handbag, stuck her favorite doll in it and hopped into the family car.

They drove south, but still heard the bombs. So they continued on the southern highway. They listened to the radio. Rumors were flying. The Turks were running rampant. Helicopters filled the sky. Greek Cypriots who attempted to defend their homes were killed.

"We realized that Kyrenia was occupied, so my father drove us to Larnaca, farther in the south," Evi said. "People were kind to us. The Red Cross gave us clothes and food. That was when I first heard the word 'refugees,' and I knew that it meant us. My little sister started crying. She didn't want to be called a refugee."

LOSING EVERYTHING

In Kyrenia, Evi's father had owned a lemon grove. The family was considered well off. Now all they owned was a car, a few suitcases and a young girl's doll.

Evi's father did work again. Although he is retired, his hobby of raising bees is profitable.

Evi lives in the capital city of Nicosia and works for the government. Her husband is customs officer. A few years ago, she heard that a Turkish Cypriot police officer was living in her old home.

A United Nations soldier, who had visited Kyrenia, brought back a picture. It was painful for Evi to look, she said. The backyard garden her pride, was in ruins.

"Other homes near mine were torn down and made into potato farms."

Cypriots are forbidden to cross the border into the Turkish occupied territory. But even if she could go. Evi could not bear to visit her old house.

"It would be too tragic. That was the happiest time in my life. How would I feel to be a stranger there? To have to ask to come into the home that I rightfully own? I want my old home back," she said.

"I want my country back, too."

HOUSE RESOLUTION 394

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I voted against House Resolution 394. This resolution expressed the sense of the U.S. House of Representatives that Congress has a constitutional obligation to conduct oversight of matters related to the operation of the Federal Government. The Constitution grants Congress extensive authority to oversee and investigate executive branch activities. We should thoroughly, aggressively, and diligently investigate allegations of wrongdoing, mismanagement, and abuse of power.

However, I do not agree that our oversight role should be used simultaneously in a situation where a special prosecutor has been appointed, an investigation is ongoing and a grand jury is sitting to receive testimony. It seems to me that for Congress to conduct an oversight hearing in that kind of circumstance not only unnecessarily duplicates efforts, but also endangers the investigation of the special prosecutor. Many people may recall that in the Iran-Contra investigation Congress intervened with its own investigation. Unfortunately the testimony given by witnesses at those hearings actually jeopardized and tarnished the criminal indictments that the special prosecutor was able to bring against administration officials who violated the law.

I think we should have learned our lesson from Iran-Contra. If we intervene before the special prosecutor is able to conclude his investigation, we may interfere with those results. I think it is better that we stay our hand until the special prosecutor has been able to perform his job.

A TRIBUTE TO THE FEDERAL FIREFIGHTERS AT THE MARINE CORPS LOGISTICS BASE, BARSTOW, CA

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the fine work and dedicated service of the Federal firefighters at the Marine Corps Logistics Base [MCLB] in Barstow, CA. The last few months have proven to be a trying time for the citizens of southern California as they have suffered the effects of raging wildfires and a catastrophic earthquake. It is because of the immediate and exemplary response of these firefighters that the lives and property of the citizens of southern California were saved and protected.

In October and November 1993 several wildfires stretched across southern California devastating its residents and businesses. At this time of crisis, the firefighters at MCLB responded with professionalism and dedication as they provided an engine company which not only served the immediate Barstow area, but San Bernardino County and Los Angeles County as well. Indicative of their high regard for the safety of the community, these firefighters put their lives on the line as they fought with scarce resources and weary spirits.

Tragedy struck again on January 17, 1994, as a devastating earthquake shook southern California, claiming the lives of many and causing billions of dollars in damage. Once again the firefighters at MCLB responded in an outstanding manner. With their lives at stake these men again valiantly fought the destructive fires and provided emergency medical assistance. By successfully implementing carefully designed plans, the firefighters brought much needed relief to the community. These firefighters demonstrated their commitment of public safety by their willingness to help people and agencies all across the region.

Specifically, I would like to bring to your attention three outstanding gentlemen whose leadership, knowledge, and expertise enabled the MCLB firefighters to respond to these two events with precision and professionalism. Col. R.H. Myers, base commander, MCLB, Lieutenant Colonel Kebelman, director, F&S division, MCLB, and fire chief "Skip" Westfield, Fire Department, MCLB are model officers who serve as shining examples of courage and fortitude which aided California in pulling through these emergencies.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me, our colleagues, and their many friends and family in honoring the firefighters at MCLB for their extensive and dedicated service. Because of their hard work and commitment to protecting the lives and property of southern Californians, it is only fitting that the House recognize them today.

TRIBUTE TO CARBONDALE TERRIERS BASKETBALL TEAM

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to my colleagues' attention the outstanding efforts of the Carbondale Terriers basketball team from Carbondale, IL, High School during the recent Illinois AA State basketball championships.

Victory was close for the Terriers as a last-second shot ran around the rim and out again, a shot that came at the end of a hard-fought 61–60 contest with Peoria Manual. A second-place finish in no way lessens the significance of their fantastic season, and Coach Tim Bleyer and the entire Carbondale team is to be congratulated for their string of victories.

As much as the Nation focuses on college basketball and the NCAA tournament, they may be forgetting that some of the best games are in the high school championships. Certainly, the Carbondale Terriers proved that on May 19 during the championship game. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Terriers for their outstanding season.

REMARKS IN DEFENSE OF MULTIPLE USE BY COMMISSIONER LOUISE LISTON

HON. BILL ORTON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. ORTON. Mr. Speaker, there are many of us from the West who feel that we confront problems which are poorly understood by those from other regions. The extremely high percentage of public land within the boundaries of our States and counties present additional challenges to our State and local governments which others do not have to face. In my own State, for example, almost 70 percent of the land is federally controlled and for several of the rural counties in my district, that figure is well over 90 percent.

One of the biggest challenges this situation presents to local officials is trying to encourage economic stability and growth in the face of Federal land management policies which often seem to be producing the opposite results. Local leaders too often find themselves fighting for the very survival of their communities in an arena where the Federal Government is perceived to be a major part of the problem rather than part of the solution.

In this, as in other crisis situations, some people rise to the challenges confronting them and demonstrate the highest levels of leadership. Certainly, that has been the case with Louise Liston, a commissioner from Garfield County in my district. Commissioner Liston is nationally recognized as one of the most thoughtful and eloquent advocates of a balanced approach to natural resources and land use policies. She also is one of the staunchest defenders of preserving the unique culture of the rural West, a goal to which I wholeheartedly subscribe as well.

I am personally convinced that our Western cultural heritage is one of the few wellsprings we can tap to restore and revitalize a national character which now, at times, seems to be faltering.

Recently, Commissioner Liston delivered a speech which highlights several critical aspects of the dilemma we face in the West. She suggests that the principles of multiple use management which have served us so well for decades should continue to be the basis for Federal land and resource management decisions. I was very impressed by the logic, eloquence and insight contained in her speech and I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

THE MULTIPLE-USE SUSTAINED-YIELD ACT: THE ANSWER TO THE PUBLIC LANDS DILEMMA

I am a rancher's wife, retired school teacher, county commissioner in Southern Utah and Chair of the National Association of Counties Public Lands Steering Committee. I live in Escalante where my grandfather and great-grandfather ran sheep and cattle on the Escalante Desert to the south and on the mountains to the west and north. My husband's great-grandfather was the first man to bring cattle into the valley back in the late 1800's. We both come from a proud pioneer heritage, and for over forty years have struggled to maintain a livelihood for ourselves and five children in Southern Utah. We love it there, as did our ancestors, who also struggled, but against different odds. They also battled the elements, and isolation, but today added to those are government restrictions and regulations, wilderness designation and endangered species.

In the past we have shared our red sandstone canyons, high plateaus, deserts, and mountains with everyone. Isn't it interesting that these areas have survived for eons of time and have become even more rugged and spectacular with its passing, and all without the help of present day nature lovers and suitcase saviors who seem to be such experts in preserving the land. We don't deny their weekend love affairs with the land are very passionate and intense, but that love seems so superficial when compared to our love of the land which is a harmony that stems from sacrifice and struggle, from respect and caring for the very source of our livelihoods.

Ours is a deep and abiding love that has grown from achieving a balance over the years between our immediate needs and those of future generations. That balance is evident when we look at recent BLM and Forest Service management studies. They show that the nation's public lands are in better condition today than at any time in this century. I attribute much of that success to the Multiple-Use Sustained-Yield Act passed in June of 1960. It is one of the greatest tools from the past that still holds the best hope for the future.

Of all the environmental laws on record in the United States, none had a stronger endorsement than this one. After Senator Hubert Humphrey introduced the bill and sat down, no one rose to oppose him. No one. Not one person. In fact speaker after speaker, 17 in all, stood up to agree with him. It has since been seldom litigated and has not been amended once since its enactment. To me that is more than enough proof of its success and more especially, its importance to us, 33 years later.

Up until recent years, established management practice on our public lands has always been one of multiple use. That meant that timber harvesting, oil exploration, mining, grazing and recreation were guaranteed a place in present and future policy.

I think everyone here would agree that it often requires a very delicate balancing between wise use of our natural resources and protection of our critical environments. But I strongly believe that's something we can effectively resolve in sensible, realistic, down-to-earth practices based on substantiated evidence rather than unsubstantiated emotional rhetoric.

It seems that more and more the emphasis in multiple-use management is shifting to protection and away from commodity uses. In simple terms, that means that jobs in timber, oil, mining, and cattle industries are being lost. The direct and indirect impacts of that shift is endangering the existence of communities that are dependent upon those natural resources for their survival. A list of ten "endangered communities" was once again released by the National Association of Counties in early November. Those communities, by the way, even though there were only ten listed, represent hundreds of other resource-dependent communities that are suffering from the same imbalance of decisions by the federal government on how public lands are used.

Because of location, present lack of funds to improve infrastructure, limited opportunities to diversify, and inability to attract stable, well paying jobs, most rural communities cannot have a healthy economy without relying upon the use of the federal lands. We can diversify to some extent, but may find in doing so that we actually adversely affect the condition of our nation's ecosystems and cause unforeseen financial burdens on the budget. Even more serious consequences may occur when local custom and culture are systematically destroyed by land management decisions and environmental scare tactics. When community morales are low, with people living in fear of losing jobs and having their schools close, we experience a dramatic increase in spouse and child abuse and escalating occurrences of alcohol and drug abuse.

Right now many of our young people living in rural areas feel their constitutional rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are being violated more and more by federal restrictions, regulations, and designations that are perceived as destroying their ability to find jobs, build homes, and plan for a marriage and reasonably secure future. Talk about an endangered species! We are actually jeopardizing the future of those young people by locking up potential development of our natural resources with no promise of a healthy, sustainable economy for them to enjoy.

I personally feel that when we pit economic values such as person's job or income or way of life against environmental values, we achieve very little. And I guess that's why I strongly support the multiple-use practice, because instead of pitting environmental and economic interests at odds with each other, multiple-use endorses a we-can-do-both attitude. There is enough land out there for all of us. It is possible to protect and maintain our natural resources while making beneficial use of them at the same time. In fact, much of the land is already protected by various state and federal laws, and thousands of acres will always be protected by its very nature. That's something easterners will never under- stand unless they've "walked the land."

More and more the long-term impacts resulting from environmental fanaticism in our nation are having a devastating effect on the economy, our schools and roads, our towns and people, the historic uses of our public lands, and our traditional values so vital to a healthy democratic society.

Greedy preservationists will never be satisfied in their quest for more and more land, for wilderness, for cattle grazing to be stopped, for mining to be done away with, for ridiculous listings of endangered species, for wetlands to be set aside, for industry and growth to be curbed, because it will mean the end of their cause, and more importantly, the end of their jobs.

Instead of being solely concerned about the impacts on the land, we should also be concerned about the impacts on families, communities and schools. What we don't stop to realize is that our public lands control the economic activity of the nation. Stopping the use and development of our natural resources on those lands jeopardizes not only our personal freedoms, but the national economy and security as well. And yet, piece by piece, I see the multiple-use concept being eroded away, and in its place single-use concepts are gaining strength. Massive centralization of power and dominion over our public lands by the federal government is not the answer. Our public lands were meant to be used to build a greater and mightier nation, not as tools to tear it down. Wise use of those lands means preserving the natural resources for the public and not from the public. If we act through the emotionalism of preservation rhetoric, it comes down to wise use versus no use. And no use means no jobs, no grazing, no roads, no tax base, and no money for the needed services rural America demands and deserves.

The multiple-use sustained-yield approach to managing our natural resources has proven in the past to be effective. Its can-do-both philosophy is something we cannot simply abandon as we face the environmental changes that await us. Only by achieving a desired balance can we hope to preserve both the land and the people.

What most Americans at this point do not realize is, that the most valuable natural resource is the human resource.

Thank you,

---

TRIBUTE TO RAYMOND SPILLMAN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Raymond Spillman, who will be retiring from the Internal Revenue Service in Sacramento, CA, after 38 years of Federal service. On Friday, February 18, 1994, family, friends, and colleagues held a dinner in his honor to bid a fond farewell as he retires.

Through the course of his Federal service experience Ray has had the opportunity to live and work in a number of locations across this great country of ours and has confronted many challenges in the complex world of tax collection. In this capacity, he has developed outstanding leadership abilities, clearly demonstrated by the respect he commands from his peers for his work in managing the Sacramento district office of the IRS. He began his service to the United States in the Army, which included a stint as a finance officer in Japan during the early fifties. He began his career with the Internal Revenue Service as a revenue agent in Chicago. Along the way he earned a law degree from DePaul University, and worked his way up to the position of district director in Albany, NY. This was followed by a move to Washington, DC, where Ray served as Deputy Assistant to the Commissioner of the IRS during the Carter administration and during a portion of Reagan's first term. Finally, his career brought him to Sacramento, where he was selected to serve as the district's first director in 1983.

There has been a number of notable achievements in the course of Ray's career with the Internal Revenue Service. What stands out in my mind, because it is of great benefit to my constituents, was his leadership in formulating the new Sacramento district. He assembled the management team, and set the standard of excellence which they follow to this day. The Sacramento district under his leadership has led the way in specializing in quality customer service.

Ray has put to work his tremendous leadership abilities in areas other than the IRS. Throughout his life experiences Ray has developed a genuine understanding of the many issues affecting the quality of life in America, and has eagerly jumped into leadership positions with a number of community organizations. He was the founding president of the Federal Executive Association of Sacramento. He is on an advisory board of the University of California system. He is the chairman of the Sacramento area United Way. He is also on the board of trustees of the Mercy Foundation where he is involved in fundraising for five hospitals. As you can see, Ray is a well-rounded and highly educated man with a wealth of real-world experience who readily applies his experience and abilities to both his career and his community. Sacramento has been very fortunate to be the home of such an outstanding leader.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to recognize Raymond Spillman for his commitment to the Federal Government and to his community. He is an example that all public servants would do well to emulate. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating him and wishing him happiness in his retirement.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the winners of the 1994 McDonald's Black History Makers of Tomorrow program.

The McDonald's Black History Makers of Tomorrow program is an educational program that recognizes leadership, character, community service, and exceptional scholarship among the country's most talented youth. Honored during Black History Month, these young men and women represent vision and hope for the future that will shape America. The program features talented, minority youth and provides their peers with positive role models.

The McDonald's Black History Makers of Tomorrow program honors outstanding high school juniors for their leadership, scholarship, community service, and character. The students that participated were asked to write a 500-word essay entitled, "How I Plan to Make an Impact on Black History". In response, many of the 1994 winners indicated that education as well as communication was the key to success. Over 50 applications were received throughout the Washington, DC area. From those, 15 winners were selected and were recognized at a reception on Capitol Hill on February 25, 1994. These outstanding students will be McDonald's ambassadors throughout the year.

Now in its seventh year, this program honors outstanding high school juniors who have demonstrated leadership qualities and who possess the ability to make a significant contribution to the future growth and development of our nation.

A special significance is attached to the title of Eagle Scout, a significance that accompanies a young man throughout his life. As he pursues endeavors in higher education, business, industry, and community service, he carries with him the lofty goal of success through leadership.

The highest rank in Scouting, each Eagle Scout has had to fulfill rigorous requirements in the areas of leadership, service, and outdoor skills. The Eagle Award is granted upon the demonstration of proficiency in different areas of skills, required for rank progression, including Tenderfoot, Second Class, First Class, Star, Life, and Eagle. Specific tests are administered, which must be passed for proper advancement. Those who are successful, are rewarded with merit badges which signify the mastery of Scoutcraft skills, as well as acquisition of skills in areas of personal interest. Of the more than 100 badges available, 21 must be earned to qualify for Eagle status, 11 of which are required in the areas of First Aid, Citizenship in the Community, Citizenship in the Nation, Citizenship in the World, Communications, Safety, Environmental Science, Personal Management, and Camping. The Scout has a choice between Emergency Preparedness and Lifesaving, and a choice among Personal Fitness, Swimming, and Sports.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and my colleagues to join me in saluting these new Eagle Scouts. I salute also the Boy Scouts of America for instituting the Eagle Scout Award and establishing the stringent criteria that each of these young men has met. It is my sincere belief that these men will continue to distinguish themselves and their communities through public service.

A SALUTE TO VIETNAM VETERANS

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, a very special event will be taking place in my district next month. Hillsborough County Friends of the Parks and Veterans Memorial Musuem Committee are hosting "A Salute to Vietnam Veterans" at Edward Medard Park.

This week-long salute is to honor all Vietnam veterans and will include the Moving Wall. This event is dedicated to Vietnam veterans and their families.

The Moving Wall is a 1/2 scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, DC. The Moving Wall is 250 feet long and contains the names of 58,191 Americans killed during the Vietnam war. Approximately 1,300 of these service members are still unaccounted for prisoners of war [POWS] or missing in action [MIA].

The Moving Wall is a powerful symbol. Hundreds of thousands of people across the country have visited it in or near their communities. As of January 1, 1993, the Moving Wall has been displayed in 315 communities throughout the United States and Canada. Requests to have the Moving Wall have come from as far away as Australia, Ireland, and Germany.

I am proud to say that on the four previous occasions when it has been displayed in Florida, approximately 300,000 Floridians have visited the Moving Wall. During the 2-day "Salute to Vietnam Veterans," 50,000 people are expected to visit the Moving Wall.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the organizers of this great event. It is a stirring reminder of just how blessed we are in the modern world to live in a free society, and will not allow us to forget that this blessing is due to the sacrifices of our friends, relatives, neighbors, and countrymen who served us all when duty called.

For as long as the American soldier stands ready to support his country and its allies, the forces of oppression and injustice will be held in check. For this, the American serviceman—the veteran—must never be forgotten.

GONZALEZ RECEIVES HOUSING HERO AWARD

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs was the first recipient of the Federal National Mortgage Association's [Fannie Mae] Housing Hero Award. Fannie Mae bestows this award on public officials whose efforts and activities enhance homeownership opportunities for low- and moderate-income people. This award was presented to Chairman GONZALEZ last night by Fannie Mae's Chairman and CEO James A. Johnson at the National Bankers Association reception held in the Rayburn House Office Building.

The inscription on the plaque read:

FANNIE MAE HOUSING HERO

Chairman Henry B. Gonzalez for his lifetime efforts to extend the American dream of homeownership to families across Texas and throughout America.

Presented with gratitude by James A. Johnson, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer.

Chairman GONZALEZ efforts over his long and distinguished career is well known by those of us who serve on the Banking Committee, so I am delighted that Jim Johnson and Fannie Mae has highlighted the housing career of my distinguished colleague from Texas by making this new and special award to HENRY GONZALEZ.

Mr. Speaker, I am including a copy of a news release on the chairman's award and Jim Johnson's remarks at the presentation.

[News Release]

REPRESENTATIVE HENRY GONZALEZ RECEIVES THE FIRST FANNIE MAE HOUSING HERO AWARD

WASHINGTON, DC.—Rep. Henry Gonzalez today received the first-ever Fannie Mae Housing Hero Award in recognition for a lifetime of accomplishments in ensuring that millions of families have decent, safe, and affordable housing throughout the nation.

"Millions of American families across the country live in better conditions and in many cases have achieved homeownership because of Chairman Gonzalez' tireless efforts over the past 32 years in Congress," said Fannie Mae Chairman James A. Johnson. "He has always fought to give people a better shot at the American dream of owning a home, and we are pleased to recognize that achievement with this award."

Since becoming chairman of the housing subcommittee in 1989, Gonzalez has written four major pieces of housing legislation, including the Cranston-Gonzalez Affordable Housing Act and the 1992 Affordable Housing Act. In addition, Gonzalez has been the primary sponsor of legislation that created the Federal Public Housing Program and FHA insurance to guarantee mortgages for single-family and multifamily housing. Gonzalez was also the primary congressional author of the "Section 235" program that has assisted several thousand families in purchasing homes in San Antonio.

The Fannie Mae Housing Hero Award was presented to Congressman Gonzalez by Mr. Johnson at the National Bankers Association's 15th Annual Congressional Reception. This is the third year that Fannie Mae has jointly sponsored the Reception in Washington, D.C.

The Fannie Mae Housing Hero Award recognizes elected officials for their lifelong work to implement policies that will help low- and moderate-income families and individuals live in decent, affordable homes and apartments.

"The Housing Hero Award in Fannie Mae's version of the Oscar," Johnson said. "It is presented to a star player in the housing arena who serves in elected office and who uses that office as an activist seeking to create housing opportunities for all low-, moderate-, and middle-income Americans. Henry Gonzalez fits that profile perfectly."

The Fannie Mae Housing Hero Award is based on a combination of votes for affordable housing initiatives and legislation that has been introduced and enacted by Congress to improve the quality of housing available to low-, moderate-, and middle-income Americans.

Fannie Mae (Federal National Mortgage Association—FNM/NYSE) is a congressionally chartered, shareholder-owned corporation and the nation's largest source of funds for home mortgages.

CONGRATULATIONS TO CAROL JOANNE SCHRADER

HON. THOMAS J. RIDGE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to offer my congratulations to Carol JoAnne Schrader, who on April 29, 1994, will be commissioned as an officer in the Navy of the United States of America.

The daughter of Kathleen Schrader and the late William Schrader, Ms. Schrader started her naval career in 1982, shortly after graduating from Lakeview High School in Mercer County PA. Ms. Schrader already has several awards to her credit, including the Navy Achievement Medal in 1988 at the Submarine Training Center at Pearl Harbor, the Naval Achievement Medal in 1990 at the U.S. Pacific Command at Camp Smith, HI, and in 1992 she received the Joint Service Commendation Medal from the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Colin Powell.

Ms. Schrader will be commissioned at the White House where she is currently employed. Following a 30-day orientation school, Ms. Schrader will be stationed aboard the U.S.S. Samuel Gompers hemiported at Alameda, CA.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I extend to Carol JoAnne Schrader my congratulations and best wishes for success in her career as a naval officer.

CAREER INFORMATION RESOURCE CENTER OF OAKLAND

---

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues the fine work initiated by a number of agencies in my district. Particularly, I would like to commend the Oakland Private Industry Council for spearheading the creation of a partnership of vocational and educational institutions dedicated to bringing job training and employment services together in a cohesive way to end the fragmentation of services that too often exist among training and service institutions.

This collaboration is called the Career Information Resource Center of Oakland [CIRCO] and its mission is to provide a one-stop location to which an individual requiring job counseling or training can come to be assessed, counseled, and referred to an appropriate job training agency or program. The goal is to guide individuals toward occupational decisions which will empower them to obtain and retain gainful employment.

The partners in this collaborative effort are the Oakland Unified School District, the Employment Development Department, Laney College, Merritt College, the city of Oakland, the Department of Rehabilitation, the Oakland Private Industry Council, and the Employment Training Coalition—a consortium of nearly 50 partners. They have formed a governing board, and within the capabilities of each, will provide onsite agency representation for career counseling and referral services as well as in-kind support.

My district has witnessed the departure of dozens of major employers and the concurrent elimination of hundreds of jobs that are directly or indirectly linked to plant shut-closures or cutbacks. This situation will be further exacerbated by the impending base closures. This dislocated group of job seekers will be added to the ever-growing group of at-risk individuals who need basic education, job training, career counseling, relevant labor market information and support in order to be prepared to reenter the work force successfully.

Additionally, this consortium seeks to better serve individuals and families in poverty, those whose native language is not English, the physically challenged, homeless, long-term unemployed, and others with multiple barriers to employment opportunities.

Comprehensive community partnerships, such as the Career Information Resource Center of Oakland, will be an important part of the solution to the employment crisis in the Oakland Bay Area. The partnership exemplifies the concept of One-Stop Career Centers anticipated by the Re-Employment Act legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the parties for having the foresight to initiate this most important venture.

HONORING BOY SCOUT TROOP 495, CONSERVATION YOUTH GROUP OF THE YEAR AWARD RECIPIENT, LEWIS RUN, PA AND JAMES W. JOHNSON, CONSERVATION EDUCATOR OF THE YEAR AWARD RECIPIENT, CUSTER CITY, PA

---

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Boy Scout Troop 495 of Lewis Run, PA, and Mr. James W. Johnson of Custer City, PA, on receiving awards from the Pennsylvania Wildlife Federation Achievement Program. Boy Scout Troop 495 was the recipient of the Conservation Youth Group of the Year Award, presented annually to a youth group in recognition of an outstanding conservation effort. Mr. Johnson was selected as the Conservation Educator of the Year, an award recognizing an individual for outstanding educational achievement through either formal or informal methods.

Under the direction of Scoutmaster William Getz, Troop 495 has been instrumental in the environmental conservation of McKean County, PA. The creation of a camporee area at the Kinzua Bridge State Park, is a prime example of their commitment and dedication to the environment. Having cleared a 50-foot-by-250-foot area that was formerly a dumping ground for debris, the Scouts were successful in grading and seeding an area, that after 20,000 hours of public service, became the camporee area that currently serves hundreds of Scouts and Scouters.

Troop 495's ongoing history of outstanding conservation efforts certainly has not gone unnoticed. They were honored as the Conservation Organization of the Year for 1992 by the Pennsylvania Association of Conservation Districts. Having also been honored by the U.S. Department of Interior, with the Volunteer Service Award for 1993, these awards testify to the obvious commitment Boy Scout Troop 495 and Scoutmaster Getz have made, and continued to make, on behalf of the environment.

It is also my distinct pleasure to recognize Custer City resident, Mr. James Johnson, for his dedication to conservation. Appropriately, Mr. Johnson serves as the assistant Scoutmaster for Boy Scout Troop 495. Mr. Johnson has earned the distinction of Conservation Educator of the Year as a result of his personal endeavors to inform young people about the importance of conservation in the areas of agriculture, fish and wildlife management, and forestry. Over the past 10 years, the programs Mr. Johnson helped implement provided over 20,000 hours of public service to county, State, and Federal lands, and have benefited more than 5,000 young people in Pennsylvania and surrounding States. Stream improvement projects, creation of permanent trail blazes, and the establishment of a traveling road show for conservation education purposes, are all projects resulting from Mr. Johnson's voluntarism.

Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honor to recognize, both Boy Scout Troop 495 and Mr. James Johnson, as award winners in the Pennsylvania Wildlife Federation Achievement Award Program. I offer them my sincere congratulations for the diligence with which they serve McKean County.

GOVERNMENT LOSSES FROM INSOLVENT SBIC'S

---

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, almost 2 years ago the President signed H.R. 4111, the Small Business Credit and Business Opportunity Enhancement Act of 1992—Public Law 102-366. Title IV of this bill includes major reform provisions to the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 under which the Small Business Administration licenses private companies to provide venture or equity-type capital to small businesses.

These private companies are designated as small business investment companies [SBIC's] or, if they restrict their activities to funding socially or economically disadvantaged small firms, as specialized small business investment companies [SSBIC's].

These companies have private capital invested in them, and based on the amount of this private money, augment the amount available for investment in small firms by obtaining Government guarantees of debentures or long-term notes which they sell to private investors.

The new law addresses cash flow problems of these SBIC's by restructuring the program to provide a new type of financing and also by requiring more private money to be invested and serve as a buffer before any Government money is lost.

We believe that the new system will be a vast improvement; however, it is inevitable that some SBIC's will not succeed. Historically, when that has occurred, the SBA liquidates or winds up the affairs of a failed or failing company by seeking a receivership under the auspices of the Federal courts. Several years ago SBIC's discovered that they could thwart this process by seeking the protection of the Bankruptcy Act.

By filing under Chapter 11 as a debtor in possession, an SBIC can frustrate SBA's efforts to liquidate the company through a receivership. Instead, the bankruptcy court generally will permit the owner-operator to continue to run the company and receive a salary well in excess of the amount SBA would have approved and to pay significant amounts for attorneys, accountants, and other professional personnel.

Most importantly, by initiating bankruptcy proceeding, the SBIC can speculate with Government money. If the SBIC's investments were promptly liquidated, the Government might receive most or at least some of its money back, but unless it receives full payment, the owner of the company would walk away empty-handed.

On the other hand, if the company can draw out the proceedings for 4 or 5 years, the SBIC's investments may appreciate in value and provide the owner with amounts remaining after the company's creditors are paid.

Thus bankruptcy is a win-win situation for the owners of the SBIC—they can continue to draw a fat salary while they wait to see if better times are ahead; if not, only the Government loses.

This type of situation exists in other industries in which participants are licensed by or are substantially regulated by the Government. There is, however, a major difference—the Bankruptcy Code does not permit such participants to hide behind it. Section 109 of title XI of the United States Code specifically prohibits the filing of bankruptcy by institutions such as: insurance companies, banks, savings and loans, and credit unions.

I believe that a similar prohibition should be applied to small business investment companies.

In the late 1980's, a dozen SBIC's with Government indebtedness of $120 million have abused the process and have filed bankruptcy. We do not know how much of this amount will actually be lost to the Government, nor will we ever know for sure how less our losses would be if the companies had been liquidated under SBA auspices through a receivership. But clearly our losses would have been less as the SBA could have controlled the company's expenses and timing on disposition of assets.

Mr. Speaker, the SBIC Program is worthwhile. It provides equity-type capital to small businesses which cannot obtain it elsewhere. However, participation in the program is a privilege and those who elect to do so should be precluded from seeking the protection of the bankruptcy courts.

The SBA is proposing a partial solution to this problem in the regulations implementing the new participating securities. It will require that SBIC's consent in advance to SBA being appointed as receiver upon the occurrence of certain specified events. SBIC's seeking financial assistance, or leverage, from SBA would provide such consent.

However, there is over $800 million in SBA financing outstanding today. SBA's new regulation will not impact these monies unless the SBIC's involved seek and receive new money from SBA. We remain at risk until the issuing SBIC's are prohibited from seeking bankruptcy as my bill provides.

I urge the Judiciary Committee to promptly consider this measure.

The text of the bill follows:

That section 109(b)(2) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "homestead association" the following: "small business investment company licensed by the Small Business Administration under subsection (c) or (d) of section 301 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. 681),".

CONSUMERS DESERVE RELIEF FROM HIGH CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to reduce credit card interest rates by capping them at 9 percent above the 6-month T-bill rate. As most observers have noticed, credit card interest rates have not exhibited the marked trend toward lower rates that has characterized most other branches of the lending industry. In fact, while the prime rate has dropped about 9 percent from its high of 12 years ago, credit card interest rates, on average, fell only two points. In contrast, mortgage rates and auto loan rates have plummeted several points each. Clearly, credit card interest rates are not responsive to market conditions, placing an inequitable burden on consumers.

The bill I am introducing today will give consumers a break from high interest rates. At today's 6-month T-bill rate of about 3 percent, under my bill, credit card interest rates would be capped at 12 percent. This would reduce rates 4.5 below the current average. For many card holders who are now paying 18 percent, the reduction would be even greater.

Further, the bill gives credit card issuers a reasonable profit margin. Consumers need relief from high credit card interest rates which have proven to be stubbornly unresponsive to the general climate of low interest rates. My bill would provide that relief, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING THE STATUS OF SENIOR U.S. MAGISTRATE JUDGES AND SENIOR U.S. BANKRUPTCY JUDGES

HON. JACK REED

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of a constituent of mine, Judge Jacob Hagopian of RI, I am introducing legislation today to establish the status of Senior U.S. Magistrate Judge and Senior U.S. Bankruptcy Judge for U.S. magistrate and bankruptcy judges who remain eligible for recall after retirement. We are facing a wave of retirements which will leave a gap on the bench in terms of both numbers and experience. Judge Hagopian suggested providing this cost free incentive to encourage retired judges to keep themselves available for continued recall service.

I am introducing this legislation in an effort to call attention to and promote discussion of this issue. I also enclose for the RECORD a resolution of the Federal Bar Association in support of this legislation as a means toward preventing judicial manpower losses while saving fiscal resources.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION 94-1—Senior Magistrate and Bankruptcy Judges

Whereas, Title 28 United States Code section 377(a) provides for the retirement for United States Magistrate Judges and United States Bankruptcy Judges based on years of service, and 28 U.S.C. section 377(b) provides for retirement for magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges upon failure of reappointment; and

Whereas, retired magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges provide a pool of expert judicial talent who, if they choose to keep themselves available for recall, may be recalled to service under sections 155(b), 375, or 636(h) of Title 28 and thereby provide relief to severely overburdened courts; and

Whereas, any magistrate judge or bankruptcy judge who retires under this section and who thereafter practices law is not eligible for recall under sections 155(b), 375, or 636(h) of Title 28; and

Whereas, in light of the number of retirements of magistrate and bankruptcy judges eligible for retirement, the diminishing financial resources of the courts, and the increasing case burden faced by the courts; and

Whereas, any non-monetary inducement that encourages skilled and motivated retired magistrate judges and bankruptcy judges to keep themselves available for recall to assist the courts in the accomplishment of their constitutional mission should be encouraged;

Now, Therefore, be it Resolved that the Federal Bar Association strongly urges the Congress and the President to support the following amendment to Title 28 United States Code section 377:

Any U.S. Magistrate Judge or Bankruptcy Judge who retires or has retired under the provisions of Title 28 U.S. Code section 377(a) or (b) and remains eligible for recall under section 377(m)(2) shall be designated "Senior Magistrate Judge" or "Senior Bankruptcy Judge" respectively.

Be it Further Resolved that the president of the Federal Bar Association is authorized to communicate copies of this resolution to the Congress and other appropriate officials.

Adopted by the Executive Committee, February 5, 1994.

CRIME BILL

HON. SANFORD D. BISHOP, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, in order to restore sanity and security to the streets of America, I strongly support a tough and fair anti-crime package that offers a balance between punishment and prevention.

Congress must provide the people with the necessary weapons to combat drug dealers, gang leaders, robbers and rapists.

Community based policing, reinforced with more cops on the beat and more money for drug treatment, buttresses our effort to win this war.

Also, Mr. Speaker, deeply rooted in any crime prevention initiative are measures that promote family values, education, and job training.

I endorse a crime package that throws three time convicted felons in jail for life, that increases penalties for adults who employ children in their misconduct, and, among other measures, Mr. Speaker, adds more Federal crimes to the death penalty list.

We must protect ourselves, our families, and our neighborhoods by locking up—and where appropriate, executing—those who repeatedly demonstrate a disregard for the sanctity of human life.

A successful crime package is one designed to displace fear with security, sanity, and confidence through a balanced approach that provides the strength and fairness needed to win the war on crime.

It is through shared responsibility and courage to change that we can stem the growth of crime and violence in America.

INSIDE SALES COMPENSATION

HON. HARRIS W. FAWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join several of my colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee in the introduction of legislation making the application of the overtime exemption under the Fair Labor Standards Act [FLSA] uniform for sales personnel.

The FLSA currently provides an exemption for certain commissioned inside sales personnel in retail and service establishments. The exemption applies to the employees in these establishments provided that the following criteria is met: First, the employee's regular rate of pay must be in excess of 1½ times the minimum wage, and second, more than half of the employee's compensation for a representative period—of not less than one month—must represent commissions on goods or services. This exemption does not, however, extend to employees in wholesale establishments.

In 1991, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in Martin versus Cooper Electric Supply Co. held that wholesale inside sales personnel were not administrative employees eligible for a statutory exemption. This in effect, put an end to what had been the practice of wholesale establishments for years and created a difference in the compensation rules as they apply to retail versus wholesale inside sales personnel. For example, an inside salesperson for a wholesale establishment must be paid time and one-half for hours worked over 40 per week, even if he or she meets the two criteria regarding the rate of pay and commissions. Yet a salesperson in a retail establishment who performs the same duties would not have to be paid overtime, so long as the wage criteria was met.

This legislation would make the application of this particular overtime exemption under the FLSA consistent for retail, wholesale, and service establishments. I would like to note that the provisions defining who is covered under section 13(a)(1) of the FLSA and the 541 regulations are very confusing. Apparently the language in the act is the result of various amendments over the years. As we consider this legislation, I hope that we can also work to simplify and streamline the language.

THE TRIUMPH OF ECONOMIC POLICY OVER ECONOMIC AID

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, our foreign aid system and the vast bureaucracy that administers it are in a shambles. For years, billions of hard-earned taxpayer dollars have been given to help developing nations grow economically with little result. In fact, in many cases these nations are worse off now than they were decades ago.

As we reassess our foreign aid programs this year, it is worth remembering that the most successful developing countries have created their own economic success by fostering economic investment, productivity, and entrepreneurship wherever possible. In other words, economic policies—not aid—make the difference for countries seeking economic growth.

On this subject, I commend to my colleagues' attention an article written by a constituent of mine, Dr. Ismail Shariff, the current chair of the department of economics at the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay.

[From the Green Bay Press-Gazette, May 8, 1993]

Economic Policies Are More Effective Than Extensive Aid

(By Dr. Ismail Shariff)

Over the past four decades, the U.S. has provided the so-called developing world with some $500 billion in aid.

Yet throughout this period, the American people have heard from various pulpits only that poverty persists in these lands and they must send more money.

Before sending in their checks, they logically might ask: What happened to the previous $500 million?

Two recent reports, one by the Agency for International Development and one by a congressional task force, offer an explanation for what's wrong with development aid.

Administrators say that no country receiving U.S. aid in the past 20 years has "graduated" from developing to a developed status. With remarkable candor, the AID reports that all too often U.S. aid promises dependence on yet more aid, not development, and calls for a radical reshaping of foreign aid programs.

The AID study follows a bipartisan task force report by the House Foreign Affairs Committee. It said aid programs are so encrusted with red tape they no longer either advance U.S. interests abroad or promote economic development. The task force skewered both Congress and the Bush administration for piling 33 different, often conflicting, foreign aid objectives one on top of another.

The panel co-chaired by Democratic Rep. Lee Hamilton and Republican Benjamin A. Gilman recommends repealing the 1961 foreign aid law abolishing AID authorizing a new agency and ending congressional micromanagement of aid programs. It noted that the current programs are caught in a maze of 75 different statutory priorities and 288 separate congressionally mandated reports. Changes in any of 700 programs must be reported to Congress.

The AID report provides evidence that sound economic policies, not foreign aid, have reduced poverty abroad.

Growth-centered South Korea has cut its infant mortality rate by more than 60 percent since 1976 and enrolls more than 90 percent of its children in high school. China's agricultural liberalization has doubled rural income since 1979 and the nation now can feed itself. It is noteworthy to realize that policies of economic growth are a constant among success cases, regardless of aid they have received.

In the light of the above conclusions, as Congress begins to debate President Clinton's budget outlays for 1994 fiscal year, specific attention should be paid to the proposed $16 billion foreign aid package. Also, in light of growing budget deficit at home, the question of continuing the foreign aid package without any realistic consideration is no longer acceptable.

About six months ago, Sen. Bob Dole, the Senate minority leader, raised for the first time on the Senate floor the issue about the logic of continuing foreign aid. He went on to suggest that we should let our foremost aid recipients, Israel and Egypt (they received about half of the total U.S. aid in 1992), know that the United States can no longer continue to dole out aid as in previous years due to its growing deficit at home and mounting demand for scarce tax dollars.

In other words, the U.S. has to realize that it cannot afford to year after year billion of dollars in foreign aid, and that all indications point out to that U.S. foreign aid to date has failed to accomplish its intended objective of making the recipient countries graduate from less developed to developed status.

Therefore, the only sensible thing left for the U.S. is to export policies that were responsible to create its own wealth to the less fortunate countries. Thus, exporting economic policies that produce real results would be the most generous aid program for all.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ORPHAN DRUG ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1994

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Orphan Drug Act Amendments of 1994. This legislation will amend the Orphan Drug Act of 1983, which was designed to stimulate research on drugs for rare diseases and disorders.

The Orphan Drug Act has been a resounding success. During the past 10 years, more than 500 orphan drugs have been designated by FDA and more than 100 of these have been approved for patient use. This compares to a mere 10 orphan drugs approved in the decade before the law was passed. As a result of the act, many thousands of rare-disease patients who had previously felt abandoned now have hope—and, in many cases, they also have a new lease on life.

In fact, on some occasions the act has been almost too successful. In recent years there have been several drugs with sales of $200 million per year or more than have qualified as orphan drugs under the act. The Orphan Drug Act was never intended to grant marketing exclusivity to these blockbuster drugs. The commercial market for these drugs provides many incentives for their development. Instead it was intended for drugs for rare diseases, which have so little prospect of profit that they would not have been developed without the incentives of the Orphan Drug Act.

The bill I am introducing today will correct this imbalance. Under the legislation, orphan drugs will be limited to 4 years of exclusivity. However, sponsors of the drugs will be able to obtain an additional 3 years of exclusivity if they can demonstrate to the Food and Drug Administration that their drug has limited commercial potential. In addition, the bill provides that where drug is so profitable that more than one company is interested in developing it, both companies can get their drugs on the market if they filed their applications for marketing within 1 year of each other and if they meet certain other conditions.

Mr. Speaker, striking the appropriate balance for the Orphan Drug Act has been a delicate issue. On the one hand, we do not want the act used for blockbuster drugs which clearly would have been developed without the additional marketing exclusivity that it provides. On the other hand, we want the incentives in the act to continue to be generous so that companies will continue to invest in orphan drugs.

I believe that this bill strikes the right balance. I am pleased to announce that it has been endorsed by the Biotechnology Industry Organization [BIO], the trade association for the biotechnology industry, which includes most of the companies that have used the act. It has also been endorsed by the National Organization for Rare Disorders, which represents patients who have the diseases which these drugs are designed to treat.

I am also pleased that my colleague, Mr. STUDDS, has joined me as a cosponsor of the bill. Mr. STUDDS has been a tireless advocate of disadvantaged patients and has worked hard to help make drugs more affordable by amending the Orphan Drug Act.

Finally I would like to note for the record that a companion bill has been introduced in the other body by Senators KASSEBAUM, METZENBAUM, and KENNEDY.

I have prepared a summary of the bill. I ask that it and the bill be included in the RECORD after this statement.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, each February we commemorate the achievements and history of African-Americans. This year, I sponsored an essay contest in Hartford, inviting high school students to tell me what Black History Month meant to them.

The entries I received from the high schools in my congressional district were marvelously impressive. These essays were both thoughtful and thought provoking. They were well written and exemplary of a generation that is shaping our Nation.

I heard from Terry-Ann Mitchell who drew on the inspiration of Maya Angelou and the lessons we can learn from history. Terry-Ann wrote about the lasting impression she has of a sophomore CORE class which taught her about Benjamin Banneker, Crispus Attucks, Harriet Tubman, Sojourner Truth, and Frederick Douglass.

Trina Scott wrote that we should also remember the past and study its lessons. She wrote that a month is too short to commemorate black history—it should be celebrated every day of the year because each day someone tries to make the creed "All Men Are Created Equal" a reality.

April Krausz wrote that we need to take the time to study the lives of people who may not be famous, but have shaped the lives of others. She wrote about Biddy Mason, who became a successful businesswoman after fighting for her freedom from slavery. She described the remarkable lives of sisters Sadie and Bessie Delany, whose lives are wondrous. April also described the great influence her teachers have had on her life.

Miriam Mercado described Black History Month as a time to teach about African-Americans and a time to break with the status quo. She also talked about the common bond of many people—African-Americans, Puerto Ricans, Native Americans, and West Indians.

These essays honored Black History Month and I so enjoyed reading them. I would like to commend these students for their work. Their parents and teachers should all be proud.

I would like to insert in the RECORD the two essays which were selected by an independent panel as the most outstanding of all these entries.

The first is by Weaver High School student Monique Nelson. The second is by Hartford High School student Laquanda Plantt. I ask that both be reprinted in their entirety.

WHAT BLACK HISTORY MONTH MEANS TO ME

(By Monique Nelson)

For me, Black History Month is yet another month of the year for celebrating my African heritage. It has no special meaning to me as it does for others because I do not need the nation to appoint a special month of the year to allow me to celebrate the history of my ancestors who have contributed so much to this nation; nor do I need the nation to reinforce the idea that I should be proud of who I am. I am an African American and I have known that since the day that my eyes opened. I have always been proud of who I am or else I would not have managed to be where I am today. I do not need a "Black History Month" because I have "Black History Day" year long.

I have not always had the same perspective on Black History Month as I do now. While growing up in Hartford, CT, I remember marching in a line to my school's auditorium to attend our annual Black History Month assemblies. During these assemblies, I remember thinking Martin Luther King and Rosa Parks were the only reasons for celebrating Black History Month since each assembly that I can recollect was fully centered around Martin Luther King and Rosa Parks; this led me to conclude that these celebrations were about them. I believe this is the same perspective that many elementary school kids still have today. Some may think that the only African Americans that have contributed something to the nation are these two and we all know this is not true because African Americans have made many other contributions to this nation's success. Not only do I not currently support the manner in which Black History Month is celebrated but I think that the message it sends is detrimental. The message is distorted, leaving many people with the impression that there have only been a few Blacks that have changed the history of America. Black History Month celebrations have always failed to recognize African Americans such as Madame C. J. Walker who was America's first Black millionaire businesswomen, Lemuel Haynes who was the first Black man ordained minister in the United States, or Ida Gray who was the first Black woman to earn a Doctor of Dental Surgery degree.

I also feel that there should be recognition given to African American achievers in our own community such as lawyers, teachers, doctors, business owners, and even drug dealers or addicts who have turned their lives around for the better. Given recognition to others in our race who have made it against the odds uplifts us socially, psychologically and spiritually. There are many African Americans who succeed or who are trying their best such as a single parent or a struggling student but they never receive the recognition that they should, so they sometimes lose hope. This hope diminishes because one might start to question one's purpose of life. If we celebrate who we are everyday, there would not be any room for loss of hope. Because I fully understand all of the achievements of African Americans and how important they are to this nation, there is no question of who I am. This is why I have "Black History Day" year long. Everyday I praise myself for what I have achieved and recognize others for what they have or are trying to achieve; this in return builds my self-esteem.

Therefore, in my opinion, Black History Month as it is presently celebrated needs to be eliminated. There is a need to reform the present day celebration of African Americans because it has sent mixed messages about the history of Black achievers. The history and success of our people need to be put in our everyday school curriculum instead of recognizing and celebrating a few achievers once a year. No one else in this country will celebrate who we are and what we have achieved until we do so ourselves everyday. This is the message that needs to be instilled in young African Americans. If this message is instilled in young African Americans they will seek out their history and they will be able to celebrate Black History year long.

For me, Black History means another month, another week, and another day of celebrating who I am; a proud African American. I have always been proud of who I am and I do not need twenty-eight days to reinforce this. Celebrating my African heritage everyday, I have come to realize that there is no way one can succeed without having self-confidence and a feeling of self-worth and this can only come from knowing who you are and from where you have come.

WHAT BLACK HISTORY MONTH MEANS TO ME

(By Laquanda Plantt)

Being born an African-American is a privilege. I have come from a long line of African-Americans who had to endure a lot of pain and suffering in order for me to enjoy what I do today. Many brave blacks died to ensure us of the freedom that we have today. Slavery was a horrible institution. Blacks were saddled with the labor such as sharecropping and picking cotton. They also had to cook and clean. Most of all, they were denied an education. What good was being able to read and write going to do for a slave? If a slave didn't do as he was told, the slave would be severely beaten with a whip. Learning about this makes me appreciate more my freedom to study and learn.

One thing I have learned as a result of reading during Black History Month is that not all Blacks were slaves. Based on a letter I read by John Rolfe to Sir Edwin Sandys, I learned Blacks first came with the Spaniards in 1619, and that it was the Spaniards who were the real founders of the United States. This is a little known fact, but I know it because I read it as part of an assignment for Black History. One of the earliest free Negro settlers was Austin Dabney, a hero of the Revolutionary War. I learned also that several Blacks were in the Lewis-Clark expedition which left Virginia in 1803 to go to the Pacific. A member of the expedition, Pompey another Black man, had Pompey's Pillar in Montana named after him.

Still another thing I learned was that George William Bush, a black man, is really the founder of the State of Washington. A friend of the Indians, he led the first party of white people there from Missouri in 1843. Thanks to his friendship with the Indians, he made it possible for the whites to live there in peace. George Washington (1818–1905) was the founder of Centralia, Washington. Born a slave in Virginia, he started West and reached Washington after a 3,000 mile journey. Countless contributions have been made by Blacks in all areas of American History.

Because of the Black History Month, I have had the opportunity to read and learn about Black Americans in all aspects of life, and doing so makes me proud to be a Black American. It also makes me want to make significant accomplishments on my own so that somewhere in history, others will read about me and marvel.

VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM'S IDAHO WINNER, RUSSELL DISILVESTRO

HON. FRANK McCLOSKEY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am submitting for the RECORD an excellent and thought-provoking piece written by a young man who lives in my congressional district in Bloomington, IN.

The piece I am submitting was written by Russell DiSilvestro as an entry in the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States "Voice of Democracy" broadcast scriptwriting contest. While more than 138,000 secondary school students participated in the contest, Russell placed 10th in the Nation.

Again, I commend Russell DiSilvestro for his pro-active commitment to democracy and his ability to communicate that commitment to a broader audience.

MY COMMITMENT TO AMERICA

Come with me for a moment as we journey back in time to the year 1863 and listen to Abraham Lincoln as he delivers the Gettysburg Address. Most of us are familiar with the opening line—"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." We may not be as familiar with the statement of Lincoln's that comes a little later—"It is for us the living rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced."

Now let us journey back to 1993 and think about Lincoln's words as they relate to us today. Lincoln spoke about the need of citizens to fight to preserve their union, but they were in the midst of a Civil War. What do we, as citizens, need to do in 1993 to preserve our union? What is our responsibility as citizens of this great democracy?

As citizens, we have many responsibilities. We need to learn about our country's past, care about our country's present, and prepare ourselves for our country's future. The key to our responsibilities is found in Lincoln's words. Our country is, as he called it, an "unfinished work." We are creating a new America each day. As a young person in America, I personally must ask, "What kind of America am I helping to create?"

As a young person, I show my commitment to America by learning about my country's history, and by learning about the Constitution. I show my commitment to my country by learning about the problems that face my country, by obeying the laws of my country, and by serving my fellow countrymen. I am serving my fellow man now by participating in student government. Some day in the future, I may show my commitment to America by running for an elected public office. That is a future dream, but I don't have to wait for the future to show commitment.

I try to show my commitment by using my writing and speaking skills to promote positive things about my country. This year, I spoke on Veteran's Day at my high school about the role of veterans in protecting our country's freedoms. Another unique way I have shown my commitment to America is by giving speeches about the importance of voting.

Why voting? Why have I chosen this topic as a unique focus of my commitment to America? Because I think that voting is so fundamental to our system of democracy. The world events of the past few years have made me stop and think about our country, our system of democracy in comparison to other forms of government. All over the world, people literally have been dying for a democratic system that will allow them to vote. The students of China flooded Tianamen Square, the people of East Germany broke down the wall, hungry for freedom! In the recent breakup of the Soviet Union, we witnessed the flowering of a new democracy where a totalitarian government once stood.

But freedom always has a cost. The birth of freedom, like any birth, involves pain, and, like any birth, involves the shedding of blood. Our own country and government were established only after the loss of many lives. Soldiers with bleeding feet starved, froze, and died serving under George Washington at Valley Forge. They paid a price so that we could have a democracy today!

How important is our democracy? Just ask the veterans who fought against Hitler in World War II. Just ask the United States soldiers who risked their lives in the Persian Gulf conflict. Just ask the families whose sons' and daughters' names are engraved on the Vietnam War Memorial.

Let's think back to Lincoln's closing remarks at this Gettysburg Address—"We here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom * * " Each time we show our commitment to America, we give freedom a new birth. By showing our commitment to America, we can join our dream to the dream of Abraham Lincoln: that this government " * * of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

HONORING FORMER NEW JERSEY STATE SENATOR THOMAS F. COWAN

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of a leader in my home State of New Jersey, who is being honored this coming Saturday night, March 26th, by the Hudson County Association for Brain Injured Children. Former State Senator Thomas F. Cowan, of Jersey City, is the honoree at this year's dinner.

Senator Cowan ably represented parts of Bergen and Hudson Counties from the day of his election to the Assembly in 1977, where he served three terms until his election to the State Senate in 1983. In his three Senate terms, Tom established a reputation as an experienced legislator, and a dependable servant of the people of the 32d District.

A Jersey City native, Tom attended St. Paul's School in his hometown, and went on to the Holy Family Academy in Bayonne. During the conclusion of World War II, he served in the Army from July 1945 to April 1946, and later returned to service from May 1952 to April 1954 during the Korean conflict. At the conclusion of his service, he had attained the rank of sergeant. Tom later continued his education locally, attending Seton Hall University, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in Social Studies and Political Science in 1962.

Tom serves as the business representative of Local 825 of the International Union of Operating Engineers, and is chairman of the Political Action and Education Committee of Local 825. He is also a trustee of the Local's Pension and Welfare Funds, and a member of the National Foundation of Health, Welfare and Pension Funds. As a delegate to both the New Jersey State AFL–CIO and the New Jersey State Building Trades conventions, Tom has demonstrated outstanding leadership on behalf of the union's membership.

A member of the Holy Name Society of St. Aedan's Church, Tom's dedication to his family and his community has never wavered. I commend Mr. Cowan's record of public service to my colleagues, and ask them to join me in recognizing his accomplishments as he accepts his honors this Saturday night.

CROATIAN LEADERS SHOW SUPPORT FOR DOBROSLAV PARAGA AS LEGAL PRESIDENT OF THE CROATION PARTY OF RIGHTS

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to take this opportunity to share a letter with my colleagues on behalf of Dobroslav Paraga, an opposition leader in the Croatian Parliament who was democratically elected the President of the Croatian Party of Rights. Attempts by the Tudjman government to deprive him of his elected right to function in this capacity have resulted in the following letter of protest.

Let us not forget how far Croatia has yet to come in granting democratic rights to its own citizens. The United States can be of great assistance in supporting progress in this area in its negotiations with the Croatian Government.

At this point, I wish to include the text of the letter which follows:

LETTER OF SUPPORT TO THE CROATIAN PARTY OF RIGHTS AND ITS LEGAL PRESIDENT, DOBROSLAV PARAGA

I condemn the unconstitutional and unlawful decision by the Ministry of Administration of the Republic of Croatia which has named persons it authorizes to represent the Croatian Party of Rights. Such a decision is in violation of the law on political parties in Croatia as well as the statutes of the Croatian Party of Rights.

In the interest of democracy and parliamentarism in Croatia I ask that the authorities make correct application of laws governing this case. I think that it is extremely unethical that the Croatian government and its ministers interfere in the work of political parties such as they have done with the Croatian Party of Rights. I also think it is unethical that the courts, whose main function is to protect civil rights, have ignored the appeals of those whose civil rights have been violated.

With this letter I am expressing my concern for the state of democracy in Croatia, as well as my support for the legal and legitimate representatives of the Croatian Party of Tights in their struggle for democracy, and a State based on law and unobstructed political party activity. These are the rights of all citizens regardless of their political affiliation.

I agree that this letter with my signature may be made public.

The following is a list of the signatories to the above letter:

1. Miko Tripalo, President of Soros Foundation, Vice-President of Croatian Helsinki Committee, Representative of Croatian Parliament.
2. Danijel Ivin, Member of Presidency of Croatian Helsinki Committee
3. Vjekoslav Vidovic, retired President of Supreme Court of Croatia
4. Dragutin Lesar, President of Association of Independent Unions of Croatia
5. Boris Kunst, President of Zagreb Chapter of Association of Independent Unions of Croatia
6. Dr. Semso Tankovic, President of Party for Democratic Action in Croatia
7. Hans Peter Rullmann, Publisher of "Hrvatska Domovina" newspaper, President of German-Croatian Society
8. Dr. Marko Veselica, President of Croatian Christian Democratic Union
9. Vladimir Jakic, Head Secretary of Croatian Helsinki Committee
10. Izet Aganovic, Professor at Zagreb University, President of Merhamet for Croatia and Bosnia-Hercegovina
11. Dr. Ivo Banac, Professor at Yale University
12. Dr. Ivo Goldstein, Professor at Zagreb University
13. Ivan Zvonimir Cicak, President of Croatian Helsinki Committee for Human Rights
14. Dr. Juraj Plenkovic, Professor at Zagreb University
15. Dr. Slobodan Lang, Croatian Ambassador for Human Rights and Professor at Zagreb University
16. Slavko Goldstein, Editor of "Novi Liber" magazine

TRIBUTE TO MAJ. GEN. THOMAS M. MONTGOMERY

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, during World War II the name, General Montgomery was enormously famous and just a bit controversial.

Now in this year of 1994, there is another General Montgomery, Maj. Gen. Thomas M. Montgomery of the U.S. Army. There is nothing controversial about this General Montgomery. He is an authentic American hero with a distinguished and long standing record of noble service to our Nation.

On March 31st the United States ends its military involvement in Somalia. General Montgomery has been the Commanding Officer of all U.S. forces in Somalia, and now it's home for him.

General Montgomery served longer than any other U.S. service member in Somila, and he is among the last 20,000 to leave that unhappy land.

General Montgomery also served as Deputy Commander of the U.N. Operation in Somalia, an operation that involved 30,000 people from 29 nations. He completed that assignment on February 7, 1994.

Like all great commanders, General Montgomery has been rather modest about his own towering achievements, preferring to heap praise on the soldiers, sailors, air personnel and marines of the United States. These people endured enormous hardships, were exposed to danger and brought honor to our Defense Department. But so did Gen. Tom Montgomery, the first American general officer to don the blue beret of the United Nations.

Not the least of the General's accomplishments is to have been born a Hoosier, a graduate of Arsenal Technical High School in Indianapolis, later earning a bachelor's degree in Slavic languages, including Russian, as well as in literature at Indiana University where he completed his Reserve officer's training and was commissioned a Lieutenant by the Army.

Serving the Army as an armor officer, specializing in tanks, General Montgomery spent a total of 10 years on the Plains of Europe, earning his professional spurs while helping to protect West Germany's borders from the threat of the Communist force which, at the time, outnumbered his own 10 to 1.

General Montgomery also served two separate 1 year tours with the 11th Armored Black Horse Calvary Regiment in Vietnam.

Later he served as the Deputy Commander of the 8th Infantry Division. And he has been an excellent instructor in the classrooms of outstanding military schools in the United States, including the famous War College.

His awards are a litany of valor and devotion to duty. He has earned the Defense Distinguished Service Medal and two Legions of Merit. He has also and, I think, more significantly been awarded both the Silver and Bronze Stars with the V attachment symbolizing valor in Southeast Asia. The German Government awarded General Montgomery the Federal Republic of Germany's Honor Cross in Silver.

Thus he was well suited to make history in Somalia. And he has done just that with discipline, skill and honor.

As I have said many times and in many places, true patriotism, is not a shouting matter. It is an abiding thing, calm and steady on stormy seas as well as the safety of the harbor. And General Montgomery reflects that ideal. Not flashy, but calm, quiet and dignified. He is the personification of modest but awesome valor.

The poet Homer wrote, "In a just world, there would be no need for valor." But this is not a just world. And as long as it is not, pray God that America may always have the likes of Gen. Thomas M. Montgomery.

LEGISLATION TO SIMPLIFY APPLICATION OF FLSA

HON. AUSTIN J. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation to simplify application of the Fair Labor Standards Act [FLSA] to commissioned sales personnel.

As many of my colleagues know, the FLSA has an exemption for both outside sales representatives and inside commission sales personnel. In the case of outside sales, the exemption is from the minimum wage requirement as well as the overtime premium pay requirement, section 13(a) 29 U.S.C. 213(a). With respect to inside commission sales personnel, the exemption is only from the standard overtime pay requirements, section 7(i) 29 U.S.C. 207(i).

Under current law, the 7(i) exemption applies only to retail and service establishments. In order to qualify for the exemption, it requires that an employee must receive at least 1½ times the minimum wage for all hours worked, and at least half of the employee's compensation must be in the form of a bona fide commission sales program.

I am concerned with the affect of this exemption on wholesale suppliers, who often compete head to head with retailers. In the past wholesalers frequently had outside sales representatives who visited commercial customers on the road. Today, conditions in various industries have changed, especially the building materials industry. Previously wholesalers sold building supplies and materials to contractors and retail merchants for resale to the public. Now in that industry, major retailers have become the biggest players.

These corporate retail giants generate a large volume of business through multiple retail warehouse sales outlets dispersed over wide geographic areas. Thus, they are large enough to purchase directly from manufacturers and either operate their own distribution network or have factory shipment directly to their retail locations. Consequently, wholesalers no longer play a role in selling building materials or supplies to major retailers in that industry.

Many of these major retail operations also operate contractor or builder departments which often have special hours, separate phone lines, job site delivery systems, and volume purchase discount pricing policies to service builders. Such retail operations may, and often do, take full advantage of the 7(i) overtime exemption for their sales personnel, including their contractor or builder department personnel. Such inside sales personnel may make solicitation phone or fax calls to builders and contractors or respond to product inquiries and take orders from builder-contractors, by phone, fax, mail or over a counter.

Wholesale supplier's inside sales personnel engage in identical business activity, contacting or responding to builder/contractors, making sales, and arranging delivery. These wholesale sales personnel also receive compensation in the form of commissions on sales, yet their employers are excluded from making use of the inside commission sales exemption.

I am concerned about the impact of the 7(i) exemption in the building supply industry. The exemption tends to competitively favor massive corporate retailers over local or regional wholesale distributors. Since such wholesale distributors are the only link to the manufacturers for small local building material supply retailers, the current exemption may also favor the largest building material corporate retailers over smaller ones. As more wholesale distributors are eliminated from the building material supply industry, small retail suppliers may be cut off because their operations are too small for direct purchase from manufacturers or not large enough to cost effectively operate their own shipping and distribution network.

For the reasons I have outlined, I am introducing legislation to apply the 7(i) inside commission sales exemption to employees of wholesale suppliers. I would accomplish this objective by striking statutory reference to retail and service establishment rather than adding language to cover an additional category of employers—wholesalers. The distinction is, of course, only semantic but such differences can sometimes also have important political implications.

ONE OF THE FOX VALLEY'S FINEST

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, the foundation of our country's economy and the key to our economic success in the future is entrepreneurship. Our Nation has been blessed with countless examples of people with the ability to take an idea, a small business, an invention, or other raw material, and help it grow through hard work and intelligence into a thriving business.

I rise today to pay tribute to one such entrepreneur and a very special member of the Fox Valley community in Wisconsin, Mr. John T. Streur. Mr. Streur was recently presented with a Certificate of Commendation by the State of Wisconsin for a lifetime of contributions to his community and the publishing industry.

Mr. Streur knows that the American dream lives on. He recently wrote to me with the stirring message, "Thank God for America's free enterprise system—it still works." He wrote that with authority, because he is a living example of what a lifetime of hard work can accomplish.

John Streur began his working life as a paperboy, and later became a route salesman and driver for a periodical in Appleton, WI. After fighting in World War II for 3½ years in the service of his country, he returned home, bought the Appleton News Agency and changed its name to Badger Periodical. Often working 7 days a week for long hours with members of his family working by his side, the business grew from just 5 to 90 employees. His company's 43 delivery trucks—compared to the original three—are now common sights as they traverse the highways of the Upper Midwest to distribute magazines, books, comics, and cards.

Along the way, John has been recognized for his notable contributions to the business community and his fellow citizens. In 1985 he was named small business person of the year by the Fox Valley Chamber of Commerce. Badger Periodical has been recognized for exemplary performance in book wholesaling by the International Periodical Distributors Association every year since 1989. And in October 1993 he was picked as Wholesaler of the Year by the International Periodical Distributors Association.

Mr. Streur has not limited his efforts to the publishing industry, however. Knowing the importance of making financial available to businesses so that they can grow, he has served on several bank boards, including the Outagamie Bank and First Interstate Bank.

In all of these activities, he has not forgotten the importance of family. His family's dedication and loyalty to him is witnessed by the hours of work they have put in at Badger Periodical to make it successful, while other family members have built thriving businesses of their own in other areas of the publishing industry.

His family is not the only beneficiaries of his efforts. Countless other employees and their families have profited from John Streur's labors. In addition to providing stable employment for many residents of the Fox Valley over the years, he has always striven to maintain an open door policy to hear his employees' concerns and requests.

One common characteristic of the entrepreneur is the need to keep making a significant contribution whenever possible. John Streur is no exception. At an age when many people have retired and are resting on their laurels, John Streur continues to work hard and complains that there aren't enough hours in the day. He is still intimately involved in the daily running of Badger Periodical, and stays actively involved in the community.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak about the outstanding career of one of the Fox Valley's most prominent citizens. As a businessman, family man, and friend, John Streur has been a vigorous contributor to the Fox Valley community. I join his family, his employees, and his community in hoping he will continue contributing for many, many years to come.

STATEMENT ON THE UNSOELD AMENDMENT TO H.R. 6

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, March 22, during consideration of H.R. 6, the Improving America's Schools Act, I voted against an amendment offered by Mrs. UNSOELD to an amendment offered by Mr. DOOLITTLE regarding the teaching of sex education. This should not be interpreted to mean that I supported the original Doolittle amendment; quite the opposite. I had planned to oppose the Doolittle amendment.

My concern with the amendment offered by Mrs. UNSOELD is that it attempted to correct an amendment so seriously flawed in its intent that it was beyond repair. I felt that the House should vote on the original Doolittle amendment, and that it should be overwhelmingly rejected.

IN SUPPORT OF THE SARAH WEBER HOME INFUSION CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 1994

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the Sarah Weber Home Infusion Consumer Protection Act of 1994. I take pride in joining my colleague from Ohio, Congressman SHERROD BROWN, in the introduction of this important health care measure. This legislation is named in honor of Sarah Weber, a courageous young girl who suffered from cerebral palsy and intestinal disorders. Sarah's mother, Marie Kostos Weber, led the crusade for the introduction of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is designed to place regulations on the $4 billion home infusion industry, which now goes virtually unchecked. In particular, the bill would require licensing of providers of home infusion therapy services, and place limitations on physician referrals. Thus, the adoption of Mr. BROWN's proposal would guarantee that the home infusion industry operates with meaningful regulations and effective cost controls.

Mr. Speaker, throughout my tenure in Congress, I have been an advocate for legislative issues which affect the health and welfare of our citizens. This has included not only effective health care delivery, but the regulatory measures needed to ensure quality and cost-effective care for all Americans. It is for this reason that I am proud to join my colleague as a cosponsor of this important measure. I pledge my strong support and ask that my colleagues join me in ensuring the enactment of this measure in the House.

THE MEANING OF THE UNITED STATES ROLE IN SOMALIA

HON. JAMES V. HANSEN

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 24, 1994

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, in just over 1 week, the last of the American contingent in Somalia will leave that troubled land. It is a deployment that, in my judgment, should never have been made.

The initial policy of the Bush administration to halt the starvation of the Somali people eventually led to the nation-building policy of the United Nations which was sanctioned by the Clinton administration. For a time, the military excesses of rival warlords, which were responsible for the depth of the starvation of the Somali people, were tempered. Now, with the withdrawal of American and other forces, the chance of a return to the chaotic desperation which led to the intervention is rated a mere tossup.

Fritz Wirth, writing in the March 17 edition of Die Welt, has summarized the disaster of United States policy in Somalia from a German perspective. A translated copy of his article follows my remarks. Wirth notes two major effects of our policy in Somalia. First, the United States experience in Somalia has made the Nation even more reluctant to commit United States forces abroad for an uncertain purpose. Second, Somalia exposed the inadequacies of the United Nations in dealing with complicated peacekeeping operations.

Wirth asserts that this has ramifications for United States policy in Bosnia. I agree. The Nation is hesitant and ambivalent about the President's policy in Bosnia and his willingness to commit thousands of United States troops to enforce what is likely to be a tenuous peace. The existing U.N. peacekeeping effort in Bosnia, if the March 13 incident at Bihac is any indication, is far from being an effective deterrent to breaches of the peace.

Mr. Speaker, there are lessons to be learned from the experience in Somalia. The question is whether the President is attentive to them.

[From the Die Welt, Mar. 17, 1994]

DAILY DISCUSSES SOMALIA DISASTER, UNITED STATES POLICY

(By Fritz Wirth)

Bertrand Russell once wrote that "extreme hopes are children of extreme misery." For George Bush, this statement turned into an order 15 months ago. He sent 26,000 U.S. troops to Somalia for Operation Restore Hope to stop one of the world's most terrible famines. More than 2,000 people used to die each day under the eyes of a world that had basically been standing idly by until then.

Hunger has been defeated. These days, the last U.S. troops are leaving the country. Still, what remains is not gratitude, hope, and relief, but a question mark, fear, and foreboding. These troops are leaving as the refugees of an "impossible mission." Nothing shows the dubious and problematic nature of their withdrawal more clearly than the recent hasty Somalia mission by Chief of Staff Shalikashvili. It was a psychological morale-boosting trip, intended to dispel the feeling among the withdrawing soldiers that they are pulling out as losers.

Nevertheless, it remains a withdrawal without a victory parade and the most dismal, most dubious, and most dissatisfying U.S. military disengagement since the pullout of Beirut 11 years ago. The tragic price of the Operation Restore Hope are 37 dead and 181 wounded U.S. Soldiers. It was this price and not the fulfillment of the high hopes that dictated the order to end Operation Restore Hope.

As noble and urgent the motives for this operation have been—it was an operation of aberrations from the very beginning. It started with George Bush's extreme hopes that he could successfully end the operation even before the end of his presidency, that is to say within six weeks. It reveals that these 26,000 troops were sent to Somalia on the basis of a most deficient appreciation of the situation. Officials in Washington saw the hungry people, but not the political reasons behind them.

When, after a few months, the insufficient limits of the mission were recognized, the new administration under Clinton made the second embarrassing mistake. It handed over the U.S. Troops to the military and political incompetence of the UN bureaucracy. The United Nation's hunt for clan leader Aidid turned into a farce and finally a tragedy, when the dead bodies of U.S. troops were dragged through the streets of Mogadishu. The resulting order for the withdrawal of the U.S. forces was not determined by strategic and political considerations, but exclusively by emotions that were fueled by these grueling scenes.

It was a fatal and far-reaching decision. All European nations immediately followed with the withdrawal of their UN peace corps members. What remains are 20,000 UN soldiers, whose main contingent is provided by Pakistan, badly equipped and incompetently led. They will be at the mercy of a new looming civil war. And this new civil war also threatens to bring back starvation. In other words: Operation Restore Hope was in great probability not a mission of salvation but one of suspended chaos. The self-complacent tribute Bill Clinton paid yesterday to the returning U.S. troops describing them as great winners had a rather embarrassing touch.

After all, the real tragedy in Somalia is that the clan leaders are now stronger than before this folded intervention. They have become legends as a result of their resistance to the powerful United States. This is also why they saw no reason to make any concessions in the efforts to achieve political and diplomatic solutions for the Somalia conflict in Nairobi and Cairo in the past few months. Thus, in Somalia, the signals continue point to confrontation.

However, the consequences of this operation go far beyond Somalia. They became visible over the past few months in places as far away as Haiti and Bosnia. Somalia defined the limits of U.S. military commitment of ground operations and direct enemy contact. The readiness to take risks in such operations has further decreased as a result of Somalia. At the same time, it exposed the limits to military leadership and strategy at the level of the highly overtaxed United Nations. What remains in Somalia is a minimum of hope and the distressing danger of new extreme misery.
